Torpedoing of Danish Steamer by Germans, Taken as Evidence Submarine Warfare Will Be Continued, Adds to Anxiety Over Cunarder Which Had Been Warned of Peril

Believe Transylvania May Have Changed Her Course to North or South in Order to Elude Any Submarines That Might Be Waiting at Entrance to St. George's Channel

The peril of the Transylvania, marked as the next victim of Germany's submarines, and within the war zone since noon yesterday, crowded even the tense situation between Washington and Berlin from the public mind yesterday.

The liner sailed May 7 from New York, and up to a late hour last night no word had been received from her.

That she was marked for destruction by German submarines became known shortly after she sailed. She carried over eight hundred passengers, and 120 of these were Americans.

The grave consequences which would ensue should she be torpedoed caused the utmost apprehension for her safety.

It was hoped that in view of the protest of President Wilson against German's submarine activity, Germany would have halted her submarine warfare till the difficulties between Germany and the United States could be adjusted.

TORPEDOING OF DANISH SHIP ALARMS

But late yesterday word came that the Danish steamship Martha, had been torpedoed and sunk in the North Sea, her crew being saved. The sunking of this neutral vessel renewed the fear that Germany will persist in her determination to sink the Transylvania, risking the consequences of such an action.

On the Transylvania, out of the 120 Americans, there were sixty-five New Englanders. Twenty-one of them came from Greater Boston. The relatives of these people, together with the thousands who, waited anxiously for news of the vessel because of the international significance of her fate, telephoned constantly during the day to the newspaper offices and to the Cunard line headquarters.

The Cunard line—which has the Transylvania under charter, although she belongs to the Anchor line—said late yesterday that no word had been received from the vessel.

SHIPS WOULD NOT USE WIRELESS

This, they said, should occasion no alarm, for it was unlikely that the ship would risk betraying her position, as she neared the Irish coast, by any wireless communication.

The Cunard officials affirmed that while wireless messages have been sent to their liners during crossings since the war began, the liners themselves have responded only in case of necessity.

The exact time of the Transylvania's entrance into the war zone was doubtful. Her normal speed is in the neighborhood of fifteen knot. Should this normal be maintained it was estimated she would reach the spot where the Lusitania was torpedoed some time late yesterday, English time, or a little after noon by American time.

It was suggested, however, that the Transylvania, on receipt of wireless warnings that submarines were waiting for her, might have altered her course.

MIGHT HAVE CHANGED LINER'S COURSE

She was bound for Liverpool and Glasgow. But under pressure she might have preferred to round the north of Ireland, making Glasgow as her first port, and sending her passengers from there by rail.

Or to thwart submarines patrolling St. George's Channel, she might have swung far to the southward and made port at Plymouth, on the English channel.

Either of these courses would mean delay in hearing from the liner; would mean that her safe arrival might not occur till some time Monday, or even Tuesday, instead of Sunday as expected.

Since the vessel was not to stop at Queenstown, it was believed any German submarines waiting for her would patrol the south of St. George's channel, between Wexford and Fishguard. This is several hours' sailing beyond the point where the Lusitania was torpedoed, and on her regular course the Transylvania

SUFFRAGISTS HAVE MEETING ON COMMON

Speakers Pleased That More Than Half Their Audience Is Composed of Men.

Miss Minnie Mulrey of the Massachusetts Women Suffrage Association told the men at a suffrage meeting on Boston Common yesterday afternoon that:

"We women are going to beg, and persecute if necessary, you men until you give us the vote."

This was a final open-air meeting to bring to a triumphant close the convention week which has marked the opening of the big referendum campaign. This campaign, a State-wide one, is to be waged in the hope, rather the assurance, that the referendum vote on woman suffrage next November will go "Yes."

MARCHING SONG SUNG.

There were speaking and band music and singing of the "Suffrage Marching Song." Suffrage arguments were put forth with vigor. Suffrage workers went through the crowd with the famous "melting pot" to collect offerings of cash or jewels or

2-Alarms for Stubborn Fire in Union Street

Two alarms were sounded early today for a fire which badly damaged the fish market conducted by Corliss & Kehir in the three-story brick building Nos. 97-98 Union street. The police estimated the damage at about $1,500.

The fire started in the rear of the market from an unknown cause. It spread to an unoccupied store above where it was checked by the firemen.

The second alarm was sounded as a precautionary measure, the scene of the fire being in the heart of the market district. The firemen were handicapped in their work by a dense volume of smoke, which filled the entire building.

2 Armed Men Rob Store in Revere

Held by the revolvers of two young men, Fernando Wood, proprietor of a lunch room at No. 115 Centennial avenue, Revere, was forced into a room and kept there several hours. The men ransacked the store and took $10 from the cash register.

Inquiry on 2-Alarm Dorchester Fire

Captain Charles Reardon of Dorchester police station No. 11 began an investigation of the cause of a 2-alarm fire which destroyed an unoccupied bungalow valued at $4,000 at No. 84 Itasca street, Dorchester, last night, and caused damage estimated by the police at $1,000 to the nearby house at No. 88 Itasca street, owned and occupied by Herbert E. Webb.

GERARD HANDS U. S. NOTE TO BERLIN OFFICE

BERLIN, May 15.—James W. Gerard, American ambassador, this morning delivered to the foreign office here the American note with reference to the sinking of the Cunard liner Lusitania.

WASHINGTON, May 15.—Opinion here today was that Germany, in replying to President Wilson's Lusitania note, will yield certain points and open the way to further negotiations on others, thus averting an immediate crisis.

A circumstance that point strongly to a conciliatory attitude on the part of Berlin is the fact that Dr. Bernhard Dernburg, former German Colonial Minister, and who has been regarded as the unofficial spokesman of the Kaiser in this country, is preparing to leave. His presence here has been a fruitful source of irritation, and his deportation or at least desirable since has been considered.

Another circumstance taken as indicative of a peaceful attitude on the part of Germany is the fact that the advertisement issued by the Imperial Germany Embassy warning Americans against voyages into the war zone has been cancelled.

The German note is expected in about one week. Meanwhile there has been an appreciable improvement in feeling here. With the American note dispatched to Germany, it is felt that our part is done, that our position has been made clear and that we are committed to whatever course Germany shall choose to force upon us.

The decision, for good or ill, has been made. That is the prevailing sentiment. The situation is squarely in Germany's hands and it is for Germany to dictate what the future shall bring.

Those, and they are a majority of the well informed men here, who expect Germany to modify her position, point to several considerations which they believe will sway Germany in her decision.

They point out that stubbornness on Germany's part will automatically alienate the sympathies of neutral nations—sympathies which in case of German defeat may well save the German Empire from dismemberment.

WOULD ALIENATE NEUTRALS.

They point out that should Germany defy the United States other neutral nations will almost certainly support this

SALANDRA IS AGAIN PREMIER; CRISIS IN ITALY

Civil War Threatened as Riots Increase; King Convokes Deputies.

By International News Service.

ROME, May 16, 11 A. M.—Antonio Salandra is again premier of Italy.

After two failures to secure a leader capable of forming a cabinet, King Victor Emmanuel again turned to his ex-premier to the great intervention-ist and Salandra is back in office.

Salandra is stronger than he ever was, for he has come back able to make terms as to the composition of the cabinet and as the one man who can solve the great problem which Italy faces, "war or revolution."

In an effort to avert civil war King Victor Emmanuel has convoked the Chamber of Deputies Monday. The King acted upon the advice of both interventionists and neutralists.

There is little doubt which way Salandra's choice will turn, for he represents the people and the choice of the people is unmistakable. It is that Italy shall be declared on Austria unless every Italian demand is fully granted.

Salandra's acceptance of the task of forming a cabinet has ended a day of rioting from one end of Italy to the other, of political turmoil and of kingly temporizing and perplexity. Two million twenty four hours Victor Emmanuel has sought some one to replace Salandra and twice he has been unsuccessful.

MARCORA REFUSED.

First the King asked Giuseppe Marcora, a Garibaldian veteran, to organize a cabinet. He refused.

The King then begged Paolo Carasso, Salandra's minister of the treasury, to accept the task. He also refused. Then Salandra was once more appealed to, and this time he yielded to the king's demand.

But Italy is not yet saved, for outside of parcels political intriguing a violent war fever is raging in Rome. Ten thousand troops are employed in picketing the city. Notwithstanding this large crowd yesterday afternoon held up tramway cars and wrecked German shops. Twenty speakers, demanding war, addressed a large gathering in Borghese Square.

Afterwards a great procession was formed, and, cheering for war, marched through the streets. Flowers were thrown from the windows of houses on the demonstrators.

GUARD YOU BELOW.

Demonstrations have been going on all evening and a cavalry escort was necessary in one instance to scatter the crowds. Fortunately none were

WOMAN DROWNS SELF IN BATHTUB

Dorchester Husband Finds Dead Wife Holding His Picture in Her Hand.

Mrs. Christine L. Washburn, the young wife of Henry C. Washburn and an active member of the Pilgrim Congregational Church at Upham's Corner, committed suicide yesterday afternoon by drowning herself in the bathtub at her home, No. 257 Columbia road, Dorchester.

Mrs. Washburn's health had been poor since the birth of her baby, four months ago. This preyed on her mind. She became melancholy, with an increasing obsession that she was a burden.

Her body was found by her horrified husband when he returned home at the end of the day.

The farewell note dwelt on the wife's ill health and also contained a pitiful line that: "I am sorry to leave my devoted husband."

Medical Examiner Leary pronounced the tragedy a suicide by drowning. He also mentioned the ill health of Mrs. Washburn and the mental trouble that seemed to have clouded her mind.

LISBON SHELLED, SCORES KILLED

Rebels Turn Guns on Capitol; Report President Missing and Ex-Premier Slain.

LONDON, May 15.—Revolutionary uprisings culminated today in the bombardment of Lisbon by Portuguese warships in the hands of the revolutionists. Reports have been received of the assassination of the former Portuguese Premier, Dr. Affonso Costa.

Immense damage was done to the city by the bombardment, scores of persons were killed and many wounded. Many inhabitants are fleeing the city. Madrid says President Manuel de Arriaga of Portugal is reported to have disappeared. Other reports say the insurrection has been crushed.

Lisbon reports the revolutionary committee has issued a proclamation stating that the movement is to restore a real republic.

Crews of the warships which shelled Lisbon are said to have first killed their officers.

The revolutionary committee met aboard the battleship Vasco da Gama to select a new government, with Joao Chagas, former Premier, at the head. Madrid says that the Spanish government has received from the Governor of Eadajos, near the Portuguese frontier, this statement:

"The rebellion broke out at Lisbon aboard the cruiser Adamastor, which at 2:30 o'clock bombarded the city. Two hundred civilians stormed the Alcantara barracks, entering the barracks and cheering the republic. Many were killed and wounded.

Real Estate Is Always Good Security

The man who buys real estate knows that he is getting value for his money. He knows that it is something he can fall back on. No one can take it away from him. Real estate doesn't vanish overnight. It is always there—in one place, and most always of one value. Everyone concedes that the purchase of real estate is highly desirable.

If you have a few dollars lying idle, why not put it in real estate? Buy property that lies in the path of a boom. There is plenty of such land in the vicinity of Boston. You will find most of it advertised in the "Real Estate" columns of the Boston American.

Perhaps you now own some property which you would like to exchange, or sell—to use the money elsewhere. If so, the most effective way to advertise it is to list it in the "Real Estate" columns of the Boston American. Leave your ad at either office—80-82 Summer street, or 304 Washington street—or

Washington Believes Germany Will Yield Points

TRANSYLVANIA, WARNED OF PERIL, CARRIED MUNITIONS

ADMIRALTY GUARD A MYSTERY

What dispositions the English admiralty may have made to guard the liner were not known. It was assumed that patrol boats would meet her, even though this precaution was omitted in the case of the Lusitania.

These boats would probably meet her off the coast of Ireland and escort her safely to Liverpool.

A disquieting rumor that the vessel had already been sunk was circulated yesterday. A Harvard professor said the college wireless station had picked up a message to the effort.

But as no confirmation of this report could be secured, it was generally discounted. The station at the Charlestown Navy Yard had received no such message, the operator said.

Captain John Bates, of the Transylvania, when the vessel sailed from New York shortly after word came that the Lusitania had been sunk, declared that ever since the war began he had been hoping to meet a submarine and ram her.

WOULD OMIT NO PRECAUTIONS.

He intimated that no precautions would be omitted to save his vessel and keep her clear of the the submarine patrol, however.

The possibility that submarines sent out to torpedo the Transylvania might be out of touch with Berlin, and so might not have received orders to spare the vessel, even though those orders were issued, caused some disquiet yesterday.

The Transylvania carried a cargo composed largely of munitions of war. The Germans have claimed the right to torpedo such vessels.

The American liner Philadelphia, which sailed May 8, was expected to dock in Liverpool late last night. She passed the Transylvania in mid-ocean.

SIXTY-FIVE FROM NEW ENGLAND PASSENGERS ON THE TRANSYLVANIA

Among the passengers who sailed on the Anchor liner Transylvania were sixty-five from New England. Of these, twenty-one came from Boston, and the Metropolitan District. All the sixty-five New Englanders went second or third class, 40 in the former and fifty in the latter.

Among the passengers on the ship were:

Leon G. Tenell, who is superintendent of the manufacturing plant of the E. V. Tenell & Company manufacturers of etched metal name plates, on Middlesex court, Mount Ida. He intends enlisting in the British army.

PLANNED TO ENLIST

Mr. Tenell's home is at 40 Mount Vernon street, Malden. He is prominent in soccer football circles, having been a member of the coach English soccer team in the Scottish team in the international contests held in Boston last year. His wife and three children live at Medford.

Ernest Steeling, assistant janitor of the Malden Y. M. C. A. sailed on the Transylvania to visit his old home in Portland, South England. He had informed some of his friends that he might enlist.

One of the New England passengers outside of the Metropolitan district is Mrs. Mary Tinsley of No. 232 Bay street, Taunton. She is forty-two years old and a native of England. Mr. Collister attended Oxford College and was recommended to the Montana Agricultural School. They lived with Miss Mary Nichols of Sunderland road. Three years ago the children visited the New York, where he was connected with the German Kali Company. Mrs. Collister was called to England by the death of her sister, but it was not known to her husband that her husband intended to cross, too.

It was reported that James Stephens of New Bedford, wife and two children, were to sail on the Transylvania, having missed the Lusitania, but the Transylvania's list fails to show their names.

Mrs. Clara Miles, living at No. 3 Madison court, Roxbury, a passenger on the Transylvania, left her home last Thursday to go to Liverpool to meet her husband, William Miles, who has been in France for the past month and to accompany him back to this country. Mrs. Dorothy Walch of Leominster, daughter of Mrs. Miles, said that her stepfather went abroad on the December last January

THREE FROM ATTLEBORO.

Attleboro has three people on the Transylvania list. Mr. and Mrs. Fred Bullard and son of Wall street, Attleboro, who is a jewelry worker, had cancelled sailings on the Lusitania, and chosen the Transylvania as safer. The family was going to Europe in order to join celebrate the golden wedding of Mrs. Bullard's parents.

Julius Corrigan of No. 56 Peck street, Providence, was returning to Ireland to live after an absence of eight. He came from Tyrone twenty-three years ago, arriving in time to see the inauguration of Abraham Lincoln. He has twelve children. Coming to Providence late in life for the gas company and saved his money. He left Providence late in April for New York, where he called at the Cunard office, Miss Louise Corrigan of Providence, a niece, was also a passenger. Third street, New York, that he was unable to get passage on the Lusitania, and would take the next boat.

Miss Transylvania has given an and Mrs. H. Webster of Montague City road, Holyoke, Mass. Mr. and Mrs. George J. Collister of Montague City road, Holyoke, Mass. Collister comes from Ontario County, from Ontario, Canada, having previously come from England. Mr. Collister attended Oxford College and was recommended to the Montana Agricultural School. They lived with Miss Mary Nichols of Sunderland road. Three years ago the children visited the New York, where he was connected with the German Kali Company. Mrs. Collister was called to England by the death of her sister, but it was not known to her husband that her husband intended to cross, too.

DERNBURG GOING, BERNSTORFF SAYS

By International News Service.

WASHINGTON, May 15.—Count von Bernstorff, the German ambassador, today personally confirmed the report that Dr. Bernhard Dernburg, who has been frequently referred to as the "unofficial representative of Emperor William in this country," has decided to leave the United States, Ambassador Bernstorff said.

Dr. Dernburg has decided of his own free will and volition to leave the United States. Dr. Dernburg is a commissioner of the German Red Cross and a private citizen. His decision to leave the United States was voluntary and without suggestion from the embassy or the German government. The fact that Dr. Dernburg came to this country on the public with me and is my personal friend, has no bearing whatever on the matter."

Ambassador Bernstorff declined to comment in any way upon the note addressed by President Wilson to the German government.

"There is nothing I can say," he said. "I must remain silent until instructed by my government authorizing me to speak. I cannot discuss my phase of the situation. I have my duty to perform and shall not do so."

The ambassador smiled when asked whether he had received any more threats that the embassy would be blown up.

"I have had so many shocks during the past ten months that I am afraid that I would be blown up or killed in any way would no longer disturb me," he said.

DERNBURG GRIEVED, SAYS IF HE LEAVES IT WILL BE VOLUNTARILY

NEW YORK, May 15.—Although Dr. Bernhard Dernburg refused last night for publication today, he remarked to friends that the "unfair and unjust criticism which has been directed at him in this country, particularly since the sinking of the Lusitania.

"I have carefully avoided in my writings and speeches doing or saying anything that would embarrass this country in the presentation of her neutrality," said the German statesman, "supporting he come from Washington and which hint that I am to leave this country because of pressure direct or implied—that have been made against me are errant fakes.

"If I do leave this country it will not be because I am forced to leave. I shall leave of my own free will."

Dr. Dernburg, it is known, has expressed to friends his belief that an organized attempt has been made and is being made to force him to leave this country. He places responsibility for this alleged movement at the door of pronounced British sympathizers and of certain Americans who have made enormous profits from the sale of munitions of war to the allies. "In every utterance I have made in this country I have carefully explained that I spoke merely as a German, not as an official envoy," added Dr. Dernburg, to a friend.

ARABIC DOCKS AT NEW YORK WITH 200 PASSENGERS

NEW YORK, May 15.—The White Star liner Arabic arrived here today from Liverpool with 200 passengers on board. Among them was Lieutenant Palker of the French artillery, who came here to supervise the making of shells for the French army in American factories.

EXPECT COUNTER PROPOSALS AS TO SUBMARINE WARFARE

of Germany's war machine.

They point out that the entry of the United States into the war would mean a great increase in the supply of American ammunition for the allies.

And they point out that Germany may well seize this chance quickly. At least one of these contends Holland, is in a position to attack a fortified line at Essen and the Krupp works, the heart of Germany itself and put her out of the world's eyes by taking a conciliatory and humane attitude.

That the German reply cannot be expected within a week, that is now conceded. It is felt certain Germany will consult Austrian opinion before formulating her response to the American note, and that after Dernburg has put some deliberation into his reply.

From German sources come yesterday suggestions as to the nature of the expected note. These suggestions are that the note would embody the following clauses:

PROPOSE ARBITRATION.

1—A discussion of the Lusitania incident with a suggestion that points in dispute in this connection be referred to arbitration.

2—A proposal to abandon submarine warfare on passenger steamers if the United States will guarantee that such steamers shall not carry munitions from this country to the Allies.

3—A proposal to abandon submarine warfare on all merchant vessels if the United States will induce Great Britain to give up her food blockade of Germany.

The proposal of arbitration is not expected to draw a favorable response from this country. The attitude of the United States is that in this connection "there is nothing to arbitrate." The Lusitania was a ship was sunk illegally, and the sinking cost American lives. That is the view of the United States, and it is not this country will hold, a matter to admit of argument.

TO REJECT PROPOSAL.

The third proposal, to give up submarine warfare if Great Britain abandons her food blockade, will probably be rejected by President Wilson. It has already been rejected, in fact; for Germany made this proposal in reply to America's original protest against the submarine operations.

The attitude of this government in the matter has not changed. There is still a feeling that Germany and the United States may come together, after the present crisis is passed, but are inclined to be firmly opposed to any concessions or deviations from the stand which he has taken and which he believes rightful.

However, it became known today in this connection that at least one line of steamships, the American line, has undertaken not to carry ammunition or any other contraband on its vessels.

MAY BAR MUNITIONS.

This is the only line running ships to Europe under the Stars and Stripes. The agents of the line announced the new ruling today. Should other lines adopt this rule, Germany's expected stipulation would be met.

A high official of the State Department today discussed this expected proposal in hopeful tones. He said that the United States has prosecuted cases where explosives were carried on passenger trains, and that a similar regulation or statute could be applied to passenger vessels.

"Such a regulation," he said, "would mean that explosives would be diverted into freight vessels. If this plan were adopted, there would be only the question of damages in the event of destruction of property of neutrals.

WOULD REMOVE FRICTION.

"Such a regulation would remove to a great extent the cause of possible future friction with Germany."

The official continued that a German note couched in a reasonable tone and making this proposal would probably meet a good popular reception here.

It is declared here that Germany will ignore the exact appeal of President Wilson on the ground of humanity and civilization, and will confine its response to a strictly business-like discussion of the issues at hand.

Germany is expected to urge that American citizens took passage on the Lusitania on their own risk, and Germany hopes the number of men in this country who agree with her in this contention will grow as time passes.

It was pointed out that even Vice President Marshall has been quoted as saying that when Americans sailed on an English vessel they were stepping on English soil and must take their chances.

DERNBURG TO LEAVE.

It is believed Germany will positively refuse to concede that her actions in violating the Lusitania was illegal; but that she will rather seek by every means to justify that action. In doing this she will meet the vital requests in President Wilson's note, she will seek to shift the issue to the broader question of submarine warfare.

A hopeful turn in the situation today was the news that Dr. Dernburg will not leave the country at the request of the State Department. The question of his going will be left entirely to officially in any department of the government so far as I know."

Dr. Dernburg is either leaving at his own volition, or has been recalled to Berlin. Whether he will go to the German ambassador's residence in the South, or will seek to reach Berlin is not known.

Magrane Houston Co
PATRICIAN Shoe
FOR Women $3.50 to $5

The Summer of 1915 will go down in history as a season of VARIETY in the world of shoe style—and practically the entire variety of the coming season is comprised in the "Patrician" range.

In the seventeen years that we have been constantly devoting our largest Washington street window to the display of shoe styles, all previous showings are exceeded and excelled by the Patrician assortments displayed there now.

Choose what style you will out of the seventy-five new 1915 Patrician models, and your size, length and width is here.

Department located on the street floor at entrance. No elevator trips. The most convenient department to get into and the quickest shoe store to get out of with real satisfaction.

The shoe that has put service into the light slipper-like styles of the present and coming vogue—LIGHT SHOES THAT WEAR LIKE HEAVY ONES.

SILVERWARE FACTORY GOES OUT OF BUSINESS

Values 25c to $1.00, at . . 12c and 19c

3,500 pieces of genuine quadruple plated silver toilet articles and novelties, offering the greatest variety you ever saw at two prices. We will positively sell over $2,500 worth of silverware for less than 50c. If this sounds like an exaggeration to you and you are not using the mails you will be the loser. And you probably will never have another such opportunity. We give you our word that values are not only NOT exaggerated but are actually very much understated values. This stock was bought from the factory, when it passed by a Providence store. The store was later forced to vacate and sold the stock to a new location. Difficulties arose which compelled the dealer to dispose of his stock without delay and it was sold to us at a price which is probably not far removed from the actual cost to the manufacturer. We have not had time to mark the goods, but will do so before placing on sale.

Allies Sweep on; Taking of Carency Great Victory

RUSSIANS FAIL IN GALICIA TO CHECK DRIVES

Ablain St. Nazaire Falls to French; Paris Reports Gains Near Steenstraate.

Defeat of the Germans north of Ypres by the allied forces, who carried several trenches before Het Sas, occupied that portion of Steenstraate which lies west of the Yser, and took possession of the bridges across the canal at this point, was reported last night by the French War Office. Further gains are also announced in the fighting north of Arras.

As an offset, the Austrian report states that in both Poland and Galicia the Russians continue to retreat, while in the Pruth region all the Russian attacks have been repulsed. With the Teutonic forces "standing before the gates of Przemysl," announcement was also made of the occupation of Jaroslav, directly north of Przemysl, by the Germans and the capture of Dobromil, Stary Sambor and Borynia, to the south and east of the great Austrian fortress, by the Austrians.

PURSUING THE RUSSIANS.

Berlin claims the Russians in the Pruth littoral have been checked before Shavli. Hint of an impending battle of probably great proportions is given in the German report that the Russians have brought up hastily great bodies of reinforcements in the region south of the Niemen.

Austro-German troops have succeeded in crossing the Carpathians at a number of places in their pursuit of the Russians, says Berlin.

The French claim of the occupation of the portion of Steenstraate, west of the canal, is met by the Berlin statement that night attacks by the allies at this point were repulsed.

Again, as to the fighting north of Arras, in which the French claim the battle is continuing, the German summary says comparative quiet has fallen upon the field.

Paris asserts that further progress has been made southeast of Notre Dame de Lorette. Berlin is silent on activities in this section, but asserts that French attacks on the heights to the north have been beaten off for the most part.

Important admissions of loss of guns are made in the German report of the evacuation by the Kaiser's forces of Carency and Ablain St. Nazaire. They were forced to abandon 5 field guns, several mine throwers and five French cannon, three cuirasses and two mortars which had previously been captured from the French.

Paris claims fresh conquests in the house-to-house fighting in Neuville. The night report asserts that several groups of houses in the northern part of the village were taken from the Germans. Severe fighting has been resumed along the eastern end of the line in France, where the allies are attempting to penetrate the German lines protecting Metz. Here Berlin reports that French attacks against the German position on the road from Pont-a-Mousson to Flirey were repulsed three times.

An attack at dawn in the forest of Le Prette carried the Germans over a French trench. Other trenches were taken by the Kaiser's troops south of Ailly and east of the Meuse.

In this action Berlin claims the capture of more than 200 prisoners. Fifty prisoners were taken from the Germans in an action on the plain near the Prette wood, according to Paris.

DETAILS ADD IMPORTANCE TO THE FRENCH VICTORY AT ARRAS

By FRANKLIN P. MERRICK.

PARIS, May 15.—In a supplementary official report issued this afternoon, the French war office announces the capture of the villages of Carency and Ablain Saint Nazaire, as well as 2,000 prisoners and much material. The victory is characterized as "one of the finest successes achieved by the French troops."

The military expert of the Echo de Paris estimates that the German casualties in the battle of Ypres were 150,000 men. The war office reports follows:

"The village of Carency has been taken with the capture of nearly 2,000 prisoners and much war material. Our troops have made progress to the north of the village as well and have installed themselves in the village of Ablain Saint Nazaire.

ONE OF GREATEST VICTORIES.

"This proves to be one of the finest victories achieved by our troops in the course of recent operations.

"Carency is situated in a depression within the slopes of the hills which extend to a common point at which are situated great groups of houses radiating north, west, south, and east.

"Several attempts had been made since the Autumn to retake Carency. An attack was made on December 18 but mitrailleuse fire checked the assault. On December 21 another attack was begun and succeeded in projecting lines once more close to those of the enemy, but again mitrailleuse fire stopped further progress.

SEVERAL ATTEMPTS FAIL.

"From that time on throughout the Winter the fighting took the form of surprise attacks and mine warfare. Our trenches and earthworks became filled with water in which the troops stood guard up to their waists. Nevertheless they held their own against the enemy, digging themselves shelters and from time to time seeking to give their occupation of the ground the air of pastime.

"At last Carency became the centre of a veritable chaos of mine and artillery fire. In the course of the battle for its possession additional impromptu defences were thrown up by both sides and these were slowly and patiently improved. The situation became such that it manifestly could not be prolonged. Carency, in fact, formed a dangerous salient menacing the whole Artois offensive and would have necessitated a rectification of our front."

VICTORY NORTH OF ARRAS.

Tonight's official statement says:

"North of Ypres we have inflicted a defeat on the enemy. Our troops carried several trenches before Het Sas and at the same time they occupied that part of Steenstraate which lies west of the canal and took possession of the bridge across the canal. They captured three machine guns and made fifty prisoners, including an officer.

"North of Arras the battle continues and we have been able to make further progress to the southeast of Notre Dame de Lorette.

"Our attack began north of the Souchez Sugar factory and approached also the church. In the meantime we repulsed a counter attack on the southern slopes of Lorette.

"At Neuville-St. Vaast we continued the conquest of the Northern part of the village, carrying several groups of houses.

GERMANS CHECK ATTACKS AT YSER

By International News Service.

BERLIN, May 15, (wireless via London)—Main headquarters tonight issued the following summary of operations:

"In the western theatre:

"Near Steenstraate and the Yser canal we repulsed night attacks by the enemy. On the St. Julien-Ypres road we attacked and made some progress, capturing three English officers and sixty men, together with one machine gun.

"The number of unwounded prisoners taken since April 22 has been increased 110 officers and 5,450 men. We have also taken 500 wounded prisoners.

"To the southeast of Lille heavy artillery fighting has occurred, which, however, was not followed by any infantry attacks by the enemy.

"On the heights of Notre Dame de Lorette most of the attempts of the enemy to attack were kept down.

"An attack from the north on the high slope reached our trenches, but was broken up and repulsed with heavy loss to the enemy.

"After the evacuation of Carency and the western portion of Ablain St. Nazaire, it was ascertained that a field gun which had been built in in the first line of trenches and a number of auxiliary mine throwers had been abandoned to the enemy. Also five French guns, two or three revolver cannon and two mortars which we have previously captured from the French had been abandoned to the enemy. To the north of Arras there now is comparative quiet.

CAPTURE TRENCHES.

"South of Ailly and east of the Meuse we took some enemy trenches and captured 52 wounded and 166 unwounded Frenchmen, including a battalion commander.

"Three attacks by the enemy on our positions along the E. S. Sayfliey road were repulsed.

"In Le Prette wood by an attack made at daybreak we captured a trench held by the enemy and took a number of prisoners.

"In the eastern theatre.

"The operations and successes of the enemy which cost us three guns were followed by an advance of strong Russian forces near Szawle (Shavli). This advance has now been brought to a standstill. The Russians have now brought up reinforcements with the speed of lightning south of the Niemen. The battle here has not yet occurred.

"Near Augustowo and Kalwaria several attempts by the enemy were beaten off.

PRAISE RUSSIANS.

"In the Southeastern Theatre.

"In the region to the south of the Pilica as far as the Vistula, the allied troops (Austro-Germans) are pursuing the Russians, who are still resisting. The Bridge Head at Jaroslau on the San, was stormed on Friday.

"Shoulder to shoulder with the troops of Austro-Hungary, the troops under Gen. Von Der Marwitz have entered the region of Dobromil. Further to the south the pursuit of the Russians is relentless. In many instances the Austro-German troops have won passages over the mountains."

REDMOND LAUDS THE SONS OF ERIN FIGHTING FOR ALLIES

Quarter of a Million in the Ranks Battling for Britain. "Magnificent Response," He Says.

By International News Service.

LONDON, May 15.—John E. Redmond, the Irish leader, in a special interview with the representative of the International News Service at the House of Commons today, talked on a number of subjects, but mainly connected with Ireland and the war. Redmond at first refused to the White Paper recently published, regarding the treatment of prisoners in Germany.

"You will see," he said, "the statement of Major C. B. Vandeleur, wherein it is recorded that Irishmen prisoners were separated from other prisoners and given better treatment. They were told Germany was their friend, but the invitation of Irishmen was indignantly refused.

Redmond's voice and mein revealed his admiration for his loyal young countrymen. Then followed his most interesting revelation about Sir Roger Casement.

"I am told Sir Roger was sent by the Germans to address Irish prisoners. At first I had listened unaware of the speaker's identity. As soon as they realized the speaker was none other than Sir Roger Casement they set upon him.

HAD TO CALL THE GUARD.

"The conclusion of the incident," remarked Redmond, with indefinable glee, "was that the Prussian guard had to be called out to protect Casement from peril of his life."

It would be a serious matter indeed if Ireland had she should have considered Sir Roger Casement to be a genuine Irish type. They have repeatedly libelled him a nationalist leader. Why, he could not be elected to the meanest parish council in Ireland today."

The Irish leader naturally gave a word of unstinted appreciation of the Irish troops.

"Their record has been magnificent," he declared. "They probably have suffered more than any other regiment in the army. This has always been so.

"I heard a good story the other day about an English officer who was asked his opinion of the Irish troops. 'Oh,' he replied, 'they are magnificent fighters, but rotten soldiers. When they receive the order to retire their answer is: 'we'll be damned if we will!'"

The views of Redmond have a very special interest. Redmond has been described as a plain, competent business man of Irish politics who does his work with thoroughness and dispatch.

It is an apt description. He is not to the least suspicious nor can he see those of his colleagues called the result of speedy appeal of which the professional politician is so avid to secure. Every word he utters seems to come clear out and with the imprint of a mind kept free from all political disquiet.

Talking of the response of Ireland to the nation's hour of need, Redmond was jubilant. "Ireland has given him the most magnificent response. This response of Ireland," he said. "There are 250,000 Irishmen in the field, moving with the colors today. This includes a contribution from the colonies and Ireland herself is the colonizing nation."

"Two hundred and twenty thousand men have gone. It is the first time in history that Ireland has come freely to succor the empire in a moment of trial. In Ireland today the most outstanding feature is that we colonies herself is the self-governing nation."

It was suggested to Redmond that a new era had dawned in Ireland, and that after the war the memory of the whole nation's sacrifice would spell the discontent elements which hitherto had marred her fair name, be heartily associated.

TO END ALL DISSENSIONS.

"It is my hope and belief," he added "that after the sacrifices which have been made so readily and the blood which is being shed so freely on the field of honor, Irishmen of all creeds and politics will unite and put an end to the mad dissensions and religious animosities of the past."

"Controversial politics are unheard in Ireland today. When we have to revert to the consideration of national problems I am convinced we shall do so in practically a new world, where the hatreds of the old world will have disappeared almost completely.

"Nothing in the whole history of England is more honorable than her attitude toward Belgium, and what a significant contrast it is to the attitude of Germany and Austria toward their small nationalities—Servia, Poland, Schleswig, Alsace, and Lorraine. I believe that the fate of every small nation is at stake in this war, not only Belgium but Holland, Denmark and the Balkan States.

"We are waging this war on the behalf of smaller nationalities and against wanton, brutal aggression. This is one of the chief reasons why the Irish Nationalists are so enthusiastic in support of the allies' cause."

NOTE SUPPORTED BY THE PEOPLE, GOVERNORS SAY

Following are comments of governors of States on President Wilson's note to Germany:

Charles Henderson, Alabama—"A very strong note. I think it will be the means of protecting American rights on the high seas."

George W. Hays, Arkansas—"Firm, decisive and right."

Edward F. Dunne, Illinois—"The American nation, through the President, has spoken and the patriotic citizenship will sustain him to the end."

Samuel M. Ralston, Indiana—"Clear, firm and dignified. The American people stand back of President Wilson regardless of party or nationality."

Arthur Capper, Kansas—"Firm and powerful. All Americans will hope the German government will meet the reasonable demands."

James B. McCreary, Kentucky—"Seems to be positive, firm, comprehensive and up to the demands of the occasion."

P. L. Goldsborough, Maryland—"Duty of every American citizen loyally to support the President."

David I. Walsh, Massachusetts—"Admirable. In any event, the government has spoken for us all."

John M. Slaton, Georgia—"The situation demands calm, conservative action with a view to avoiding war if it is possible."

Woodbridge N. Ferris, Michigan—"A masterpiece of strength and diplomacy. Whatever happens, we will have reason to be proud of Woodrow Wilson."

Locke Craig, North Carolina—"The note sounds right. The people to a man will sustain the President."

Frank B. Willis, Ohio—"A note of decision and deliberate conviction which will be heard around the world."

James E. Ferguson, Texas—"Covers the ground thoroughly. All loyal Americans will cheerfully support it."

'War or Revolution' Is Cry in Italy

seriously injured. The cry "War or Revolution" frequently was heard.

Never was anyone more carefully protected from popular ire than Prince von Buelow, the German special envoy, who has been consorting with the non-interventionists. Every conceivable approach to his rose-bedecked villa is strongly protected by police.

Violent demonstrations in favor of war are reported from all large towns and cities. "Down with Giolitti" was the cry at Verona.

In Rome, all the streets leading to the Chamber of Deputies, the German embassy and the home of ex-Premier Giolitti were strongly guarded by troops with fixed bayonets. Cavalry patrolled the streets and artillery was stationed at various points.

Six thousand students met at the university and were harangued by the professors, including the rector. They then marched in procession with flags shouting for war and Italy.

At Naples two thousand students made a demonstration yesterday in favor of war. The police tried to disperse them but the students stoned the police. Several on both sides were wounded.

The situation at Milan was unusually serious, owing to the general strike proclaimed there as a protest against the course of political events. The military authorities centred troops from neighboring garrisons.

The Royal Palace, the prefecture and the German and Austrian consulates are strongly guarded by troops.

DREAD FUNERAL.

Much apprehension is felt by the authorities concerning the coming funeral of a worthless named Godda, a youth of seventeen years, who died from wounds sustained in a riot.

According to the Giornale d'Italia the final act of the Salandra cabinet was the denunciation of the part of the Triple Alliance treaty binding Italy to Germany and Austria. This step, the newspapers said, was taken to leave Italy free to declare war without delay.

On the other hand the Tribuna, in a special edition, denies that Italy has denounced the Triple Alliance. No pledge of any sort has been made this newspaper asserts, and the new cabinet will have complete liberty of action.

PARIS EXPECTS EARLY DECLARATION OF WAR BY THE ITALIANS.

PARIS, May 15.—France confidently expects that Italy will declare war against Austria before the Italian Chambers meets next week. With one accord government officials here blame German intrigue for the crisis in Rome and the resignation of the Salandra cabinet.

"But Germany's machinations will fail," a high official said today. "Mark my words, the new Italian cabinet, whoever its leader, will be a war cabinet and will declare Italy's policy before five days has passed."

For the moment Parisians have forgotten their own war. All eyes are turned toward Italy. The French communiques, telling of fresh successes around Arras, are read only after the bulletins from Rome have been devoured. The public is feverishly interested in the troubles of their sister country.

The opinion is universal here that Germany is now playing her last and most desperate card.

The belief is that Germany, unable to induce Italy to join the triple alliance, is now determined to frustrate Italy's plan to join the allies at any cost.

"German diplomats are secretly stirring up all the trouble in Italy," the French official said. "If possible, they plan to disrupt the country by civil war to keep Italy out of this war."

You are to read the large letters with each eye separately. At a distance of 10 feet, and also read the following small paragraph at exactly 15 inches from each eye.

The fourteenth of August was the day fixed upon for the celebration, by the citizens of Paris, of the anniversary of the fall of the Bastile, an event which was to be commemorated in the following year by the Festival of Federation, held on the Champ de Mars, at which the king took the oath to the constitution.

If you cannot do this it is proof that either one or both eyes are defective or that you are now wearing incorrect glasses. In either case you require the immediate attention of a specialist. If you cannot read either one or both lines and are troubled with headache, eye strain may be the cause. RICH GERMANS OF LONDON IN TERROR

Fear for Loss of Treasure if Riots are Resumed; Taking Extreme Measures.

LONDON, May 15.—The smashing and looting of German shops in the poorer parts of London has filled the Anglo-German financiers with terror lest their houses in the West End, which contains millions of pounds worth of treasure, be subjected to the same treatment. It is only fair, however, to state that the English authorities now seem to have the situation well in hand.

Sir Edgar Speyer, Baron Schroeder and Sir Sigismund Neumann, among others, have applied to the Home Office for special protection for their private residences. Following this, the Home Office has requested Lord Claude Hamilton, who is head of the special constables force of London, to furnish men for this duty, but the specials threatened to resign in a body if a single member of the force was assigned to this work.

In the absence of special police protection the financiers are taking all sorts of measures to guard their homes and property. Baron Schroeder, whose pro-German sympathies are well known, has armed all his servants and has formally notified the authorities of his intention of resisting any attack on his house by force of arms.

The Baron's house in Park lane contained one of the most valuable collections of silver and gold works of art in London. His collection of old jewelled snuff boxes is said to be worth $250,000.

Sir Edgar Speyer and Sir Sigismund Neumann removed all their gold and silver plate, pictures and china to places of safety and Sir Felix Schuster has deposited $500,000 worth of valuables in bank.

An air raid on London is almost certain to result in attack by the mob on the home of the wealthy Anglo-Germans. It is stated that the Rothschilds are trying to arrange with the government for the property of wealthy Anglo-Germans to be deposited in the Tower of London.

President Stops for a Golf Game at Old Point

By International News Service.

President Wilson came ashore at Old Point Comfort this afternoon and played golf on the Hampton golf links.

The Mayflower sailed again at 10 o'clock tonight and is expected to reach New York early Monday morning.

It was said that meanwhile the yacht would maintain wireless communication by means of which the President would be kept informed of any developments in the German-American situation.

UNANIMOUS PRAISE FROM NEW ENGLAND LEADERS FOR WILSON

New England city and State officials and leaders of public opinion were unanimous in their praise of President Wilson's note to Germany and in their readiness to support any action he might take.

Lieutenant-Governor Emery J. San Souci of Rhode Island:

"President Wilson covered the ground thoroughly in his message to Germany, and I trust that good results will follow."

JOSEPH H. GAINER, Mayor of Providence, R. I.—"President Wilson's message is the first real attempt to determine the rights of neutrals under the new conditions evident of submarine warfare. It places our government not in the position of seeking revenge, but merely in the position of effacing a national affront, but rather as sounding a clear note for humanity in general."

HARRY W. SPAULDING, Mayor of Manchester, N. H.—"I think the President's note to Germany is a very good one and right to the point."

ARTHUR B. CURTIS, Mayor of Revere—"I think the President's message to Germany at this crisis will go down in history. He can be assured of one thing, and that is, the people of the United States are with him in whatever action he may take. The strong point in his message that appealed to me was that the use of submarines should not be permitted against ships carrying innocent passengers. I think that Germany will comply with his demands."

That Mean Much

When Your Health Is Concerned

ABSOLUTELY PURE—& UNADULTERATED TRADE MARK

Your physician when called to the sick room prescribes medicines that his experience has taught him best contend with the case he has to treat—medicines that he has learned to rely upon.

Very often he finds instances where a reliable quick-acting tonic stimulant is necessary. This condition the unprejudiced physician, who knows, unhesitatingly meets by prescribing for he understands the purpose of this great stimulant—that it is purely and simply a medicinal whiskey, the one true medicinal whiskey, made exclusively for use in the hospital and home, in cases of emergency and for the sick room.

The physician who is acquainted with his subject knows there are two harmful elements, fusel oil and tannin, in the ordinary commercial or beverage whiskey. While these may not affect the strong, robust person, whiskies containing an excess of these elements should never be administered to the delicate, aged, or those in need of a pure stimulant, if due regard is given to the digestive process and central nervous forces.

Tannin in Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey.

The United States Pharmacopoeia (the Government authority on medicines and their proper preparation) long ago saw the necessity of eliminating as far as possible fusel oil and tannin from whiskey to be used for medicinal purposes. Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey has always been made for medicinal use only, and contains the least possible amount, less even than the Government standard.

The accompanying charts show the average amount of fusel oil and tannin found in the usual beverage whiskey. Then you'll note the far smaller amount shown in the U. S. Standard for medicinal whiskey.

In the next it is shown that Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey contains even less than mentioned in the U. S. Standard. This chemical analysis proves that Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey is unlike any other.

Aside from the fact that the superiority of Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey is due to its freedom from the injurious elements already mentioned, it posesses another invaluable distinction. It is made entirely from malted grains, the very best grains obtainable, and as diseased or rotten grains cannot be malted, it will readily be seen this is an asset easily estimated.

Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey taken as directed before meals and on retiring has proven an excellent remedy for indigestion and sleeplessness.

"Get Duffy's and Keep Well."

Fac-simile of bottle greatly reduced.

Remember:—That in Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey you can always obtain a pure, reliable tonic stimulant, which, if taken in the temperate prescribed dosage as indicated will prove an invaluable aid in restoring health to the delicate, the convalescent, and the aged.

You should have a bottle in your home at all times to guard against emergencies and sudden illness, or to be used as a tonic stimulant for the weak and run down.

Get a bottle now—from your druggist, dealer or grocer for $1.00—or write us how you may obtain it. Free medical booklet sent upon request.

$100,000 HOTEL FOR THE JOBLESS

A new $100,000 hotel for "the man out of a job," where a bed, bath and a meal will cost twenty cents will be built in Boston during the coming Summer and thrown open to guests on January 1. The builder is to be the Julius Fearing Dawes Hotel Association. A daily bath will be required for all guests and clothing will be fumigated during the night. The plan of the promoters is to run the hotel so that the service will show a net return of from 4 to 6 per cent. The hotel is planned to accommodate 500 guests; beds will be ten and fifteen cents a night.

Under the rules a guest can register after 6 p. m. for one night only.

Professor Kuno Francke's Poem on Fatherland

Professor Kuno Francke of the Harvard department of German languages and literature has written a war poem which is translated by Miss Katherine Royce, daughter of the late Professor Josiah Royce of the Harvard department of philosophy, as follows:

A GERMAN PRAYER

It is this the end of Europe? Then, O God
In mercy save the spirit of art fair
From the dread night that overwhelms the world.
Forth from the ruin and wreck of former days
Lead it, renewed, enlightened, purified.
Until its radiance lights the future times.
And the new heaven and earth shall dawn at last,
Soul of my folk, thou canst not turn to dust.

SIX INJURED IN BROCKTON CRASH

BROCKTON, May 15.—Six men were injured, one seriously, when two autos, one a jitney bus, collided on Pleasant street, near Ash street, shortly after 7 tonight. Paul Jones, 50, of Whitman, captain of the Whitman Independent baseball team, was hurled to the pavement on his head. He was rushed to the Brockton hospital in the police ambulance, with a possible fracture of the skull. His name was placed on the dangerous list.

Three other members of the ball club escaped with slight injuries and Charles McCarty, driver of the jitney car, and R. W. Abbott of the Mortonia street, were cut by flying glass. Both cars were disabled.

Abbott was turning into Ash street and the other car was going down Pleasant street, when the vehicles met. The ball players were returning from Stoughton.

Faculty Frowns on New Malden School Paper

A new school paper at Malden High School, hopefully named "The Optimist," is drawing pessimistic opinions of the faculty on account of editorial and humorous matter printed without the faculty having a chance to censor the "copy" first.

The Optimist is regarded as a protest against the exclusive literary society of the school and its public organ, The Oracle.

Non-members of the "Lit" organized the Lyceum in rivalry, and brought out the Optimist this week. The new paper was kept secret until it was off the press, in spite of the faculty rule of censorship.

Principal Lee and other members of the school faculty object to editorials dealing with the relations between the faculty and the students, and criticizing the athletic association for not paying the medical bill of a boy hurt in a football game last year.

"Pupil.—In room 221 in large quantities."

WOMAN AIDED IN DRUG STORE RAIDS

BROCKTON, May 15.—Mrs. Lillian Stokes of Boston stirred up the police department today by her evidence in the police court before Judge Kingsbury, some time stories were added to liquor in the city.

In her testimony she said:

"I had a partner, William Manning, with whom I was living as man and wife. My husband and I were tired of seeing him carry home every night earnings. The income for liquor I gathered for him and he would go and get all the liquor I wanted at the Jay Drug store. On the fifteenth street I got $100 and bought the property.

"Mr. Manning went right when he got the money. He bought a number of liquor stores, but either I made a mistake or he did, but it was of no use. Then I decided to go into business myself and found out that this drug store was selling liquor so freely and quietly.

Upon her testimony, Martin H. Pierce, clerk of the court, fined Mrs. Stokes $100 and sentenced her to two months in the House of Correction. Thomas Dunn, proprietor of the drug store, was fined $75 and Thomas E. Cunningham $100 and given a jail sentence.

Richard Burnett, who was also played by the police to get evidence in the liquor raids, was fined $100 and paid costs. He was also sentenced to two months in the House of Correction. Thomas Dunn, proprietor of the store, was fined $75 and Thomas E. Cunningham $100 and given a jail sentence.

Richard Burnett, who was also played by the police to get evidence in the liquor raids, was fined $100 and paid costs. He was also sentenced to two months in the House of Correction.

He told the court he was employed by the police department.

Brockton Man Hangs Himself in Cellar

BROCKTON, May 15.—Joseph L. Keeley, thirty-one, a shoe cutter, hanged himself in the cellar of his home on Tilson street, about 4 o'clock tonight, while his wife and two children were out buying provisions for the Sunday dinner. He had been feeling badly for a few days, suspended from the ceiling of the cellar by a rope tied around his neck and his knees touching the floor. Keeley had been unable to obtain work for weeks and was despondent.

Arrest Three Men in Roxbury Raid

Three men were arrested in a raid conducted by detectives Mullen and Ryan at station 10 on a charge of keeping a gaming house. Two of the prisoners gave the names of John Tassone, forty-two, thrift street, Dorchester, and Frank Sardo, forty-one. They were charged with being inmates of a house where gaming tools were found.

"Dynamite Expert" Arrested as Thief

George A. Simmons, twenty-eight, was arrested by Inspector Loughlin and Detective Sergt. Hall on a charge of the larceny of two hand irons valued at $4.00. When being booked at police headquarters Simmons said he was a dynamite expert. He was ordered held in default of $500 for the superior court.

Street Sweeper of Malden Is Killed

Dennis J. Crowley, for ten years an employe of the street department of the city of Malden, was killed last night when he was thrown headlong from the electric car which struck and killed him on Main street, Malden. He was 48 years old and lived at No. 56 Medford street, Malden.

Agree to Rebuild Dedham Line Bridge

Unanimous agreement to widen and rebuild the old stone-arch bridge over the Charles on the Dedham line at Spring street at a cost of $30,000 obtained at a joint conference between acting Commissioner of Public Works A'Hearn, the chairman of the Board of Selectmen of Dedham and the chairman of the Norfolk County commissioners yesterday. The expense will be shared by the three interests affected, under an act of the Legislature and the street railway. The Public Works Department of Boston will prepare the plans and secure estimates for the work, to be passed upon later.

Brookline Wedding at Harvard Church

The marriage of Miss Brenda Bartlett Mills, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edward F. Mills of Boxwood, to Augustus L. Lovett, Jr., son of Augustus L. Lovett, Jr., also of Brookline, took place yesterday afternoon at the Harvard Congregational church. Rev. Ambrose Vernon Rowell performed the ceremony, assisted by Rev. Norman Thomas of New York. Miss Helen Mills was maid of honor for the bridesmaids were Minna Mayo, D. Mills, Mary Thomson, Barbara Horton, Gertrude Kershaw, Edward Powers of Cedar Rapids, Ia., Peggy Achilles, Xate Ide, a classmate at the Winsor school.

The ushers were Morgan Neville, Dorland Allen, Henry Colgate, Eugene Elwell, Harry Kershaw, Edward Thomson, Sutherland Dows and Roland Baker, all classmates of the groom.

Man in Cell Tries to Hang Himself

Thomas J. Welch, sixty-five, of Lisbon street, Roxbury, a laborer, attempted to commit suicide in the Quincy police station last night by hanging himself to the door of a cell by a handkerchief. He was cut down in an unconscious condition and revived by means of a pulmotor. Welch was arrested in the afternoon for drunkenness.

Man Is Slashed in Malden Fight

As the result of a fight in the shop of the Cochrane Manufacturing Company, Barrett's lane, Malden, Stanislaw Mastalerski was removed to the Malden Hospital suffering from a bad slash in his right arm from a knife, alleged to have been wielded by Tony Zeolinski.

MEDFORD HOME ROBBED.

The home of John A. Walker, Jr., No. 111 Pelissary, West Medford, was entered by a thief last night and a number of articles, including $70 in cash, stolen. The thief entered by a rear window, which was forced open.

Aunt Sally's Advice To Beauty Seekers

Ladies note: The tired most energetic by no freckles, but don't lose them. Many a woman has lost her complexion by trying to remove freckles. Its never known to fail to use some of freckles of other common sense.

Dr. J. K. Lee, in these sentence letter, has given to the world a simple, harmless and effective remedy that removes freckles in a few days' time. This remedy is sold by druggists everywhere under the guarantee of money back if it fails to remove freckles. Get an ounce of mulsified at any druggist's and apply a little of it night and morning. The first application will show a wonderful improvement, some freckles will have disappeared, while others are fading. Full directions in every package. The ounce bottle is sufficient to clear the most unsightly freckles and get a clear, beautiful complexion.—Advertisement.

CADETS HAVE FINE GAME ON ISLAND

Refreshments at Every Base; Lots of Action; Lovely and Lively Time.

After a casual consideration of the doings of our Braves in the last two games, it appears George Stallings might have done well to spend yesterday afternoon down at Pemberton where the Non-coms and the Privates of the First Corps Cadets, Company D, fought to the finish a tremendous baseball battle in which seven home runs were scored, one man made three successive outs in the same inning, and the bases were full frequently.

Never was a game like that in land or sea. All seven of those home runs, by the way, were knocked into the deep blue bosom of Hull Gut, so the sea must be included in the category. The spectators of the remarkable game again and again went wild with enthusiasm and other things.

It was the annual reunion, field day and general jamboree of the military organization. A hundred and twenty-five members and friends attended the exercises, and of the whole number the only man who didn't play in the game—for the umpire doesn't count—was the umpire.

They broke down—these Cadets—by the Old Colony in early afternoon. They broke, in fielding in the face of overwhelming odds—the British at the Dardanelles were amateurs—and they forthwith debunched upon the old fland set to.

GUESS AT DIAMOND.

A diamond was guessed at. At first base refreshments were set. Also at second base. In fact there were refreshments at third base as well. When a runner reached first he was refreshed, if he made a home run he was allowed to sit down and pant—and be refreshed. If he reached third he could take a nap—and be refreshed.

Corporal Dr. I. M. Conant and Lieutenant Charles Field were the Non-Com battery; M. A. Pauley and Private Grinwald were in like positions for the other side. The pitchers unanimously exercised the utmost restraint. They seldom struck out more than three or four men in an inning.

When a batter hit the ball, it counted a hit, unless some fielder made a notable and outstanding Z. Then the batter was allowed to try again. If the batter struck out three times in succession, he was out. If he was over thirty, he was allowed four strikes. Back in 1876, that was the Big League rule, and the Cadets decided that was good enough for them.

Dr. Walcott was the first umpire, but later Arthur Damon took his place. Sergeant Damon umpired thereafter by sheer muscular ability. It was a joy to see him settle an argument. The argument usually landed somewhere out in right field.

Dr. Conant was a big hitter, the former Harvard catcher, was a comet. They lost track of Field's home runs after a while, but Field called the score 8 to 6 in favor of the Non Coms, and let it go at that.

ONE SAD OCCURRENCE.

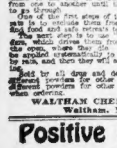
There was one sad occurrence. A gentleman clouted a ball into the ocean. He started for first, proceeded forward, and thence to third, stopping now and then by the way. At third he lingered so long that Umpire Damon called him out—home run or no home run. At the same time some one rescued the ball—two rowels.

There was only one hit for both teams. This was fortunate. As it was, the only casualty was an innocent spectator. He was hit by a batted ball, and that didn't hurt, but then the First Aid corps got him and he expired.

Not the least remarkable feature of the day was the manner in which, when the game was over, the crowd settled down.

The banquet at Pemberton Inn was a serious affair. Assistant District Attorney Ralph Hallett was toastmaster. Assistant Adjutant-General William Simmons was the guest of honor. Carroll Swan sang—mostly; and so did "Hap" Ellis, while Horace Landon played the violin. Acts from the local theatres comprised a cabaret show. There were impromptu speeches, prepared last week.

Rat-Proof Buildings



Many modern buildings are so constructed that rats can find no lodgment in the walls or foundations. Yet in a large majority of cases, many rats build their nests in the lower floors. Sometimes these nests are in the cellar, sometimes in the basement, sometimes in the first floor. A building which is constructed so that rats cannot enter is one which has no openings in the foundation. Aside from old dwellings, wharves, stables and warehouses, there are many acres of the finest business property in the city affording ample cover for rats. Old tumble-down buildings and wharves should not be tolerated in a city of civilized people. Modern fireproof buildings are rat-proof buildings if properly constructed. Many rats could be trapped and killed in the basements of good stone buildings if the doors and windows were properly screened. Rats have been known to gnaw their way through the cement floors of basements in order to get at the rich food stuffs stored in the cellars. Rats have developed such intelligence in the perpetual struggle for existence with man that it is easier stated that no matter how elaborate the plans to make a building rat-proof, it will not be so unless constant attention is exercised. A matter of climbing a few feet, to the average rat, seems as nothing to a rat. There often can be found in the cellars of old buildings rats that have to be shoveled out before they can be set to work.

One of the first steps of importance to rat-proofing is to preclude them from places where they can find food and nests to rear their young.

The next step is to use "Martin's Rat Poison," which, when eaten, brings them to the outside to die open, where they can be easily found and burned. The remedy is sold by druggists generally, and can be had from the manufacturers by mail, and then they will soon leave your building.

Sold by all drug and department stores for 50c and $1.00. Agents wanted for other parts. Name kind of building you occupy for other information when ordering.

OMIT FLOWERS AT B. U. GRADUATION

Girls Vote to Discontinue Old-Time Practice; Plans for Commencement Week.

Commencement week plans for Boston University, which includes the College of Liberal Arts, the law school, the medicine and theology schools and the departments of arts and science, are about made.

The festivities will commence May 27 and continue until the Pop concert in Symphony Hall on the night of June 2. The senior "prom," one of the most important events of the senior year, will be the first event of the week's round of pleasure. It will take place May 27 in the ballroom of the Copley Plaza.

The graduation exercises will be on June 2 in Tremont Temple. For the first time in the history of the college the girls will not be recipients of floral gifts from their friends. It has been a custom for the girls to receive flowers as they stepped from the platform after receiving their diplomas.

This year, as a result of a vote taken at a class meeting, the girls decided the custom had become worn with. The idea originated with Miss Constance Flanders. Miss Janet Collins made the motion for the new plan to be put into effect.

On Sunday, May 30, the baccalaureate sermon will be preached by President Murlin of the college. The services will be in the New Old South Church.

The School of Medicine will have its faculty reception and valedictory exercises on June 1 in the school building. Other activities for the same day will be the banquet of the alumni association of the school of Theology at the People's Temple, followed by a business session.

The Law School will also hold its class day exercises in Isaac Richards Hall at 3 p. m. On the same day the School of Medicine Alumni Association (Alumnae Chapter) will hold a banquet at Young's at 7 p. m. The Epsilon Chapter of the Alumni Association will be addressed by President Murlin at a business meeting in the college building at 5:30 p. m., followed by a dinner.

Wednesday, June 2, will be class day. Early in the morning the faculty and candidates for degrees and diplomas will march from Lothrop Hall to Tremont Temple. The exercises will be in Tremont Temple. Commencement exercises will start at 10:30. The Rev. George A. Gordon, pastor of the New Old South Church, will speak. The day's festivities will be ended with the Pop concert.

Two Brockton Girls Missing from Home

BROCKTON, May 15.—After turning pictures of themselves toward the wall, two Brockton school girls today disappeared from home. It is known they talked a good deal about New York. They are cousins, Nellie Silvia Glone, fifteen years old and an orphan, and Annie Archibald, daughter of Mrs. Sandra Archibald. Both live at No. 23 Winthrop street. One girl is supposed to have twenty-five cents and the other $15. The police are searching for them.

NEW BILL SOLVES FILM PROBLEMS

Miller Measure Providing State Censorship Supported by Picture Men and Public.

A film censorship bill has at last been submitted to the Senate committee on Ways and Means which has the hearty support of the motion picture men and the public.

It calls for the appointment by Governor Walsh of nine persons, two of them women, to serve without pay and to be known as the Board of Rules and Appeals for Film Examination. Provision is made for a paid secretary.

The measure was presented by Hiram E. Miller of Lynn. Mr. Miller is a law partner of Attorney-General Henry C. Attwill in the firm of Attwill, Miller, Crane & Russell. The bill is considered the most liberal and the sanest of the variety submitted. It is looked upon as a solution of the problems developed by the recent censorship agitation.

HITS THE BULLSEYE.

It is hailed as a boon. It has caused rejoicing among film distributors and exhibitors throughout the State. The motion picture interests claim they committed a grossly ignorant and misjudged in the recent crusade and that they have been misunderstood. Not only a relief and vindication but the best possible protection for the future they claim.

The bill speaks for itself. Here it is:

The Governor, within thirty days after the passage of this act, with the advice and consent of the Council, shall appoint a board of nine persons, of whom two shall be women, to be known as the board of rules and appeal for film examination.

The board shall be appointed to serve as follows:

Three for the term of one year each; three for terms of two years each; and three for terms of three years each, and at the expiration of their terms of office, their successors shall be appointed for terms of three years each.

Any member of said board shall be a wage earner, and one shall be a representative of the moving picture interests. The members of said board shall serve without compensation, except the secretary, who shall receive such compensation as shall be fixed by the board, subject to the approval of the Governor and the Council.

PROVIDES EXAMINATION.

SECTION 2. Any motion picture film which has been publicly exhibited and displayed in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, shall after the passage of this act, upon the written complaint of fifteen residents of the city or the town in which the same shall have been exhibited and displayed be forthwith examined by a majority of said board.

SECTION 3. If, in the judgment of a majority of said board, any film so examined shall be deemed by them to be obscene, indecent or immorally tending to corrupt the morals of the community, the board may order the elimination of such film or the objectionable part thereof.

SECTION 4. Any person, firm or corporation who, after August 1, 1915, shall publicly exhibit or show any moving picture within the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, which contains parts or sections which have been ordered eliminated by the board of rules and appeal, shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not less than twenty-five dollars nor more than three hundred dollars, or imprisoned not less than twenty days nor more than one year or both for such offence.

SECTION 6. This act shall take effect upon its passage.

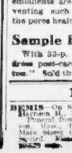
PIMPLES SPREAD ALL OVER FACE

Bothered Very Much. Burst and Grew Larger. Disfigured. Used Cuticura Soap and Ointment. After Short Time Face Clear.



344 East 100th St., New York, N. Y.—"A few weeks after I first began to shave I espied pimples on my face. Later they spread all over my face. They bothered me very much. First they came to a head and when they burst they grew larger and larger. They disfigured my face.

"A friend of mine who had the same trouble and had used Cuticura Soap and Ointment advised me to send for a free sample. I did so and used them as directed. I kept on using Cuticura Soap and Ointment which I bought and after a short time I had my face clear." (Signed) Joseph S. Catalano, June 25, 1914.

If they quickly soothe and heal itching burning, skin troubles of infants, children and adults these fragrant, super-creamy emollients are of even more value in preventing such disfigurements by keeping the pores healthy.

Sample Each Free by Mail

With 32-p. Skin Book on request. Address post-card "Cuticura, Dept. T, Boston." Sold throughout the world.

WOMAN UNAIDED CAPTURES THIEF

Mrs. Annie O'Neil Finds Burglar at Work in her Home and Makes Him Disgorge.

Mrs. Annie O'Neil, twenty-six at No. 15 Compton street, is being congratulated on all sides for her rare bravery in capturing, single-handed, a burglar whom she surprised in the act of robbing her home.

The burglar, John Toomey, is now serving a year's sentence at Deer Island. He was convicted on the story told by the plucky woman when the later faced him before Judge Bolster in the municipal court.

Mrs. O'Neil found Toomey in her house upon her return from a walk. Though startled at first, she quickly recovered her wits, commanded the thief to stand where he was, relieved him of his intended loot and held him until the arrival of a policeman.

MRS. O'NEIL'S OWN STORY.

Mrs. O'Neil tells this story of her experience.

"I had been out for a walk with my baby. I returned about 4:30 o'clock to prepare supper. As I opened the door I saw a man hiding behind the draperies. For a moment I was frightened and hesitated to enter.

"Suddenly I recalled my presence of mind and slammed the door behind me. Then I faced the man and asked: 'What are you doing here?' He replied: 'I must have made a mistake.' Then he started to go.

"As he did so I struck him. He made a move as though to strike me, but I guess something in my eye told him not to. He did not offer to move just eyeing me. It was he who then seemed afraid.

STOLEN GOODS DISGORGED.

"I saw I had the best of him and that gave me courage. I told him to hand back whatever he had taken. He had a silk shirt, a clock and a pair of shoes. He gave them back. There was a skeleton key in his pocket. He had used it to get into the house.

"After he had given these things back I ordered him to stand where he was until I could get a policeman. He did so. He didn't move an inch. I got a boy, and the boy brought the officer and I turned the man over."

Despite congratulations of many friends Mrs. O'Neil prizes herself little on her capture.

During her encounter with Toomey she kept her baby lying in its carriage within safe reach. The child itself slept quietly throughout the whole incident.

Lynn Republicans to Meet Lodge

Senator Lodge is to be given a reception at Lynn City Hall Tuesday night, under the auspices of the Lynn Republican Club. The affair will be the first step in the Senator's campaign for re-election in 1916.

'Simple, Harvard Lad a Fad,' Says Wellesley Poet

The "simple, Harvard lad" isn't a necessity at Wellesley. He isn't even listed for a visit.

Why do we rush to centre to cheer the same old cheer,
Wear headache bands and fancy shoes and harem veils this year?
Why do we go canoeing with a simple Harvard lad?
It isn't that we like them—but it's fad, fad, fad.

Walsh on Time with His New Straw Hat

Yesterday officially opened the straw hat season, and upon the downtown streets a fair proportion of the passersby were right up to the minute in their headgear.

Governor Walsh was one. He arrived at the State House yesterday morning in a straw, neither a Panama nor a Paris creation, but a plain, common or garden straw.

There were others at the State House—and elsewhere. The season's on.

STENOGRAPHER WAR GROWING

Doyle-Ferdinand Dispute May Go All the Way Up to Supreme Court.

That merry little war between Attorneys Joseph H. Doyle and Arthur G. Ferdinand, Joint occupants of the same office in the Kimball Building, over the latter's right to employ a private stenographer despite the protestations of the former, may be carried to the Supreme Court for final settlement.

This possibility was announced yesterday by Mr. Doyle following a decision rendered in Mr. Ferdinand's favor by Judge Wait of the Superior Court, before whom Doyle recently appeared in opposition to a bill in equity brought by Ferdinand.

The attorneys have shared rooms 522 and 523 in the Kimball Building for several months. Until a month or two ago their likewise had both employed the same stenographer, Miss May Mahoney. Then Mr. Ferdinand, dissatisfied with existing arrangements, employed a private stenographer, in Miss Doris M. Shogren.

Trouble thereupon brewed. Mr. Doyle objected to the presence of two stenographers in the office. He ordered Mr. Ferdinand to discharge Miss Shogren. Ferdinand refused and the court proceedings followed.

Mattapan Man Is Reported Missing

Frank English, twenty-seven, and married, disappeared from his home at No. 28 Blue Hill avenue, Mattapan, Wednesday, and has not been heard from since. Mrs. English fears her husband committed suicide. She has appealed to the police. Last Monday English asked to be allowed to leave his work at the New Haven railway station on the plea that his baby was sick. On Tuesday he telephoned that the child was dead. Mrs. English declared today that the baby is perfectly well and has not been sick.

Houston Candidate of New York Clubs

NEW YORK, May 15.—Herbert S. Houston, the publisher partner of Walter Hines Page, United States Ambassador to Great Britain, will be New York's candidate for the presidency of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the world. This great international organization of 18,000 business men will hold its twelfth convention in Chicago June 20-24. The nomination of Mr. Houston will be made in the convention by former President Elihu Root of Atlanta. This was decided today at a meeting of various advertising interests held at the Aldine Club.

SUFFRAGE DRAWS MEN WITH VOTES

Miss Mulrey Says Workers for Votes Will Even Persecute for the Cause.

The "Suffrage Marching Song" was written by Fanny C. Lancaster and Florence L. Leat. It runs thus:

Votes! Votes! we claim it! in this our land mother to the bride call, to lend a helping hand.
To settle strife where men be rife, and will to man government, not law of life, God's will on earth be done.

The women take the helm and steer As on that mystic sea,
The decks of good and gods shall clear, a cry is sailed this
Their points the compass plain will show, Hope, Charity and Love,
Are Faith, for with these she may know of Heaven and the Glory.

She wish to not to guide since the Ship of State so grand,
But with hands and with speak with man unto the Promised Land
That Peace and Plenty of vision fair, but not too late to be.

MR. HOAR CALLS TO ORDER.

The meeting was at the Parkman Memorial bandstand. When ex-Senator Roger Sherman Hoar called the assembly to order at four o'clock there were fully 2,500 present, with men in the majority. The suffrage workers were pleased that more men than women came to hear them, for the men have the votes and are the real targets for argument.

Mr. Hoar said in opening:

"I urge all men to study this suffrage question carefully."

He referred to the "Anti-suffrage" posters which proclaim that "men of Massachusetts have always protected Massachusetts women."

"The men of Massachusetts," said Mr. Hoar, "have been giving the women some pretty poor protection."

Mr. Hoar introduced Miss Mulrey, who opened with the "persecute if necessary" argument when she pursued:

"The argument that because crumbs are doing along without suffrage, therefore we don't want it is ridiculous.

"Comic papers frequently show a man sitting the floor with his sick baby at night, but in real life it is the mother who walks the floor with the sick baby. So the mother should have something to say about the milk that makes the baby sick.

"They say that the voting booth is no place for a woman. The men are awfully careful of their women all of a sudden. If the voting booth needs to be cleaned, we women will clean it up.

"Women should have the vote that they may regulate conditions where their girls work. Not one man in a hundred knows the sanitary or moral conditions of the places where his wife works.

"It is the nature of woman to uplift, not to drag down."

HOW TO CARD FOR THE BABY.

Miss Mulrey put the question of what the mother will do with the baby when she wishes to go out and vote.

"Give the baby to the woman upstairs to mind and then come back and let the woman upstairs go out and vote," was Miss Mulrey's answer to her query question.

Ignatius McNulty of Boston Central Labor Union said:

"Organized labor is a unit-standing for woman suffrage."

Miss Helen Todd, the famous suffragist from California, amused the crowd with her wit and humor when explained that she are Miss Margaret Foley were late because they had been to the ball game. The participation of presenting the five dollar gold piece offered by the Rabbits to the first Brave man making a home run.

Miss Todd said:

"Votes for women have proven greater blessing to California that the discovery of gold in '49. It has accomplished all the good that the good men of California have been trying unsuccessfully to accomplish for years. The only way we women got the vote in California was because the men were conferring it on Chinamen and everyone else, so we women rose up and demanded it too. You Massachusetts men, whose ancestors died to free the slaves cannot do less than to give the women what you give to the black man.

STORY OF CALIFORNIA.

"Things were so bad in California that you couldn't elect a dog catcher without the consent of the Southern Pacific Railroad. California was a slave state. The women showed that people were being sold like sheep. Women should get away from their Y. W. C. A's, their homes and pink teas and get their cause in the pebble. The women may not know much about schedule K, but they know enough to get after crooks and grafters. A good mother will make a good voter.

"In California the millionaire and the grafter were against us for awhile. Every man paying starvation wages, every canner employing children at long hours was against us. But the men who respected their own mothers, wives and sisters were with us. If the mothers had been consulted there would not be no war in Europe. It will not take as long for a woman to vote as it does for her to buy a hat. Any woman who feels too refined to rub elbows with her neighbor in a voting booth had better be playing a harp in another world."

PLEA FOR SQUARE DEAL

Former Senator James H. Vahey said: "There is too much flippancy among labor men concerning woman suffrage. For some years I have been greatly interested in obtaining higher wages for street car employes. At the arbitration hearings I have been impressed, when man after man went on the stand and testified that he gave his pay envelope to his wife unopened every week. If women can spend the money of the men, they should have votes with the men. I do not believe the authors of the Constitution intended to deprive women of the ballot permanently."

Henry Sterling, labor leader and member of the Massachusetts Homstead Commission said: "Be square and on the level with your women folks and give them the ballot. The ballot came to you men without effort. Get rested, the men who came before you gave their blood and their lives for the privilege. Do not deny the women anything that you will not deny yourselves."

Margaret Foley declared the only reason that Massachusetts men have not given the franchise to women is that they have never had the chance of voting on the subject.

The annual election of officers of the Massachusetts Women's Suffrage Association yesterday resulted in the re-election of last year's officers as follows:

President, Alice Stone Blackwell; vice-presidents, Mrs. Ellen S. Adams; treasurer, Mrs. Oakes Ames; chairman of the executive board, Mrs. Gertrude Halladay Leonard; chairman of the ways and means committee, Mrs. Benjamin Pitman; chairman of the legislative committee, Mrs. Teresa A. Crowley; chairman of the organization committee, Mrs. Agnes C. Pinkham; secretary and office manager, Mrs. Evelyn Peverley Coe.

MISS HELEN TODD, A LEADER IN CALIFORNIA SUFFRAGE BATTLE

Suffragists Send Message to President

The following letter has been sent to President Wilson by the Massachusetts Woman Suffrage Association:

"The Massachusetts Woman Suffrage Association, including an enrollment of over 100,000, in annual convention assembled, desires to extend to you our sincere appreciation of the grave diplomatic issues which confront you in this the darkest hour in the history of civilization.

"We trust that you will be guided by the spirit of eternal righteousness and that your efforts toward honorable and peaceful solution of our international problems may be for an enduring example to all mankind, to the end that sane judgment may ever supplant war and the lower elements of the affairs of humanity.

"Yours in the name of humanity,
"THE MASSACHUSETTS WOMAN SUFFRAGE ASSOCIATION,
"By Alice Stone Blackwell,
"President."

SUFFRAGE SCORED BY ANTI SPEAKERS

Alexander W. Samuel of the Middle Temple, London, stepped forward on the platform of Tremont Temple at the anti-suffrage meeting last night and said that:

Then Mr. Samuel proceeded to administer a verbal fire of denunciation, irony and invective against woman suffrage and the feminist movement in general.

He advised the suffragists of Ireland, in a world crisis, to deflect the course of national thought by "chatter of votes for women."

He spoke of "a small, but noisy company of women" and as "fools and parasites." He mentioned the "impracticability" and "stupidity" of a woman cabinet at the present time.

He scored the woman's peace convention of "Marys and Marthas and Janes and Elizabeths."

KENNEY PRESIDES AT MEETING.

Thomas J. Kenney, attorney and ex-President of the City Council, presided. Ex-Lieutenant-Governor Cook spoke. So did Miss Marjorie Dorman, a Manhattan girl reporter.

The floor and gallery were well filled. The audience was enthusiastic. Applause was frequent and hearty.

The latter appealed to the public eye right at the outset in the matter of dress. "For there they stationed a bevy of girls to give away 'anti-suffrage' literature and to sell 'anti' buttons at the same time."

The girls included Isabel Coolidge, Marjorie Crocker, Katherine Donovan, Dorothy Gilman, Hiller and Ethel Robbins, Ann Hall, Dorothy Katherine Robinson, Virginia Head, Anna Moran, Alice Osbervaud, Miss Jackson and Miss Lincoln.

They were white dresses, black aprons and sashes and white hats. They were in charge of Mrs. George Topman Francis. Miss Evelyn Sears, the tennis expert, helped the results equal also.

The mass meeting was in open the Summer campaign of the Massachusetts Association Opposed to the Further Extension of suffrage for men. The "suffs" had an open-air mass meeting on Boston Common in the afternoon.

The Commonwealth Band played at last night's meeting. On the platform were Chairman Kenney, ex-Lieutenant-Governor Luce, Miss Dorman, and Mr. Samuel. A comely matron in white satin gown and white straw hat, who sat next to Mr. Samuel, was introduced to the audience as Mrs. Samuel.

Chairman Kenney denied that even a full percentage of the State women desire the ballot. He quoted the women's school board votes. He said that an suffrage "is going not coming." His sharpest fling at the "suffs" was facts.

Massachusetts standards have never been drawn from the mining camps or the divorce hotels of Nevada, Utah, Idaho or Wyoming.

Former Lieutenant-Governor Luce replied to Miss Helen Todd, the suffrage speaker from California, saying California reforms were enacted by men before the women began to vote. Mr. Luce, who is Chairman of the Labor Committee, lists the States that have long had women suffrage and among them he backed ones and they women in California amenities be exempted from the right-hand law.

Miss Marjorie Dorman argued that "non-voting Indians for women would be the worst thing they could get."

Dr. Samuels topic was "Was and the Woman." He said in part:

WOMEN AND WAR.

"If women had the vote there would have been no war. That presupposes that all men love war and regard life on the battlefield as a glorious joke and that all women detest war that they would allow their country to be laid waste in honor to be without protection, everything they hold dear, destroyed, and the indictment of their country rather than that their men should fight.

"I should like to put that question to the women of Belgium today, or to the still more gifted the illustration that Belgium has taught to the world, to the women of America if, in such circumstances, they to what they would wish for their own men. The question every speech by a suffragist in favor of peace finds its happiest in the hearts and minds of all right thinking men. If women's suffrage stands for peace, I am glad of it. So does anti-women's suffrage. Only the blindness and the hard ignorance of war, but let us remember that the true interpretation of these words. Peace on earth, and to us, good will, should be one word and no one of good will. But to men who are not of good will there shall be no peace. So no peace on earth there has been exercised. One evil cancels all advocates war and strives toward war."

Doctors Said He Had Dropsy

Some time ago I had an attack of grippe which really settled in my kidneys and bladder. I doctored with the doctors and they claimed I had dropsy. I tried other remedies and got no relief from any of them. My condition was such that I was unable to work for about two months and the annoying symptoms caused me a great deal of trouble and pain. I was unable able to turn over in bed, being done all your pharmacy. I decided to give Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root a trial and after taking several bottles was able to resume my work. I cannot say too much in praise of your Swamp-Root, as the results in my case were truly wonderful.

MEXICANS KILL 3 AMERICANS

By International News Service.

WASHINGTON, May 15.—Enraged by the fatal encounter arrested by Mexican officials in the Nogal Bend of Valley of Mexico, the Texas Rangers are now engaged in a pitched battle intent on wiping out the lawless element in their territory.

A detailed cable dispatch from Admiral Howard, commander-in-chief of the Pacific fleet, brought this information to the Navy Department today.

Admiral Howard confirmed the report of the death of J. J. Devereux and Jack Wilson, who were killed the day the fighting commenced. The following day, May 13, W. W. Fox, another American, met his fate. The dispatch also confirmed the report that the bodies of Atlanta had been seriously wounded.

Interesting news in the routine of the cable, it was reported in the State Department, officials said that no marines or blue jackets have been landed from American ships to go to Tampico to safeguard American lives as the State Department so advised.

The cruiser New Orleans was due to leave Tampico for Galveston today. The cruiser Maryland left Vera Cruz for Admiral Benson, naval secretary of the navy, announced today. It is expected to keep the Navy Department fully advised of every development in the situation.

Rumors of the imminence of an American war with Mexico, and the coast of Mexico resident here from Admiral Howard. He gave no details in his report to Admiral Benson, Secretary of the Navy Daniels, but Admiral Howard for further information.

The American colony at Tuxpam, Mexico, is said to be in a panic. Several women and children, it is said to have left Tuxpam for the United States, nearly 500 Americans.

It was reported that three American women have been attacked by three natives sympathizers of Carranza.

Villarreal was 100 dead in an engagement with Obregonista Carranzistas, according to a message from Carranza to constitutionalist headquarters here today.

Mayor Curley and Wife Planning a June Honeymoon

Mayor and Mrs. James M. Curley are planning their honeymoon trip to Nantucket, which will be made immediately after the Mayor's busy routine has been laid down before to enjoy the honeymoon trip. Mayor Curley says they will start on their trip to Nantucket on the day of their honeymoon, away from business and worries and politics.

A number of their friends urged them to permit a party to be made up, but at present they refused to entertain the Mayor of Boston and his bride on their honeymoon trip, as the Mayor's plan of a trip to Nantucket and Mrs. Curley alone.

The Mayor and Mrs. Curley will leave Boston on June 3 or 4 and will be gone for about a week. Just how far away they will celebrate their second wedding anniversary June 7 is not known.

LITTLE 'SIAMESE' TWINS' DAILY LIFE IS TOLD FOR FIRST TIME

Misses Mary and Margaret Gibb, on Eve of Third Birthday Entertain American Reporter.

By WILLARD H. DAVIS

I SPENT last Sunday afternoon as the guest and playmate of little Mary and Margaret Gibb, the famous "Siamese Twins" recently under observation at the Children's Hospital, Boston, at their home in Holyoke.

I was the first newspaper man Mrs. Gibb has permitted to see the children. I talked and played with them. I am sure that every mother in New England will be interested in knowing how they look and act, how they play, of their foddness for each other and of the many strange aspects of their strange case.

The little girls will be three years old on Thursday, next month. As yet they of course fail to appreciate the sad condition which binds them together perhaps for their whole lives, for the surgeons are unable at present to give the mother guarantee that they would live if separated, as she decided to delay and see what the future will bring forth.

The Gibb home is a most attractive one. It is situated in the Elmwood section of Holyoke, and overlooks the beautiful Connecticut Valley, with the river winding its way through the many farmsteads.

On the west side of the house loom up the hills which begin the Berkshire range. Mt. Tom is but three miles away.

When I first arrived the babies were asleep. Shortly after my arrival Margaret, the light sleeper of the two, awoke and began to talk aloud to herself. Little Mary continued sleeping. The restlessness of her sister did not bother her in the least. Other times it is the opposite—Margaret quiet while Mary sits up and eats, talks and plays.

Aside from their joining together they are two exceptionally healthy, normal, lovable babies. One can feel while the other is sleeping. You can carry on a conversation with Mary while Margaret is sleeping. When they are both awake it is a beautiful picture.

They hold each other's hands in the night. Mary will reach over and put her tiny arm about her sister's neck and kiss her. Then they will laugh.

As I entered the room they was fast asleep. Margaret greeted me by saying: "Hello, mum. Tiny's asleep." Assuming that sister Mary was asleep. They call each other Tiny.

ONE ASLEEP, OTHER AWAKE.

The latter was not to sleep long, however, for she awoke, rubbing her eyes, and greeted the reporter with a beautiful child like smile. Extending her hand without any suggestion from her mother she said: "How do you do, Mister."

The mother then put them upright in their cribs and for the first time I had a chance to study them. They are really beautiful babies. With light hair, long and silky, big blue eyes, full of expression, both have a bewitching way of smiling. Their bodies are perfect. The little limbs are chubby, their hands dainty, their cheeks rosy, caused by their out-of-doors living, and they both have most lovable and congenial dispositions.

Only once did either show a disposition to cry. Margaret, who is the lively one, and by her restlessness often wakes her sister, was told by her mother that she should try and get some more sleep, whereupon, wide-awake Margaret began to cry, saying:

"I no want go bye-bye." At this point she took the visitor's derby hat and placed it on her own head. This greatly pleased sister Mary and she, too, both laughed. Not to be outdone by her sister, Mary likewise put on the hat. This was followed by more laughter.

Margaret was then asked to recite the little piece about the "Three Bears." This she did. Not a line did she miss and every word was plainly spoken. Little Mary looked at her sister with pride and clapped her little hands when Margaret had finished.

The sisters then started to sing a little song, but Mary, being a little slow Margaret finished it about three bars ahead of her sister.

When Mrs. Gibb lifted them to carry them to another room, she had one little face for each of her shoulders. She put them in a comfortable morris chair and they were then contented.

Instead Margaret reached over and kissed her sister. She returned the kiss. It was indeed a beautiful sight to witness such affection. Occasionally Margaret would get a little excited and would endeavor to break away from little Mary, not understanding why she could not do so.

At this point Margaret showed the newspaper man a little trick which she learned while at the Children's Hospital in Boston. The mother explained that it was really Mary's trick, but that Margaret had appropriated it.

APPROPRIATED TRICK.

Taking the visitor's hand she placed it on a little stick. A watch was given her. Immediately she put her little forefinger on the visitor's pulse and in the same time took on every appearance of a physician she could and endeavored to look serious, while glancing first at the watch, then at the hand. Mary did this trick also and laughed at her sister's "Tiny's" actions.

The babies were neatly attired in a white muslin dress. One dress did for the two as, of course, it was twoin-one.

The babies were sewed together at the side, near the hips. It was not noticeable. In fact there was little single about the babies that would attract any special attention, unless perhaps it was their beauty and winsome manners.

They talk but little, not because they are unable to, but it is just as well for them to wait.

German War Hero's Title for Newton Man

PHOTOS BY MARCEAU, BOSTON.

Baron Marion Pritchard von David of Newtonville and his wife, formerly Miss Ada Josephine Stevermann, whom he met at Conservatory of Music dances in 1909. They were married four days later.

Uncle's Death in Battle Gives Him Honor; Baron Wed Ada J. Stevermann in Romance.

Baron Marion Pritchard von David of Newtonville, whose romantic marriage to a Conservatory girl in 1909 brought him before the public eye, will shortly depart for Germany to claim the estate of an uncle who has been killed in battle.

The estate carries with it the Order of the Red Eagle, one of the highest orders in Germany.

Baron von David is one of the foremost X-ray experts in the country, and in Newtonville he has been engaged in physiological and psychological experiments with pupils in the schools.

In 1909, Baron von David attended a dance at the New England Conservatory of Music. He met there Miss Ada Josephine Stevermann.

Their acquaintance ripened so swiftly that four days later the two departed for Providence and there were married.

Baron von David's mother was at the time in the South. She regretted that she had not been present at her son's marriage. That said her son, "is easily remedied," and he and his bride went to New York, picked mother there, and were again married, a week after the first ceremony, and with his mother present.

SCHOOL WORK WILL GO ON.

Baron von David's work in the Newton schools has been of so important a nature that his departure, it was at first feared, would cripple it. The Baron said yesterday, however:

"I have arranged for the work to be carried on in my absence, and I shall probably shortly return to this country. My wife will remain here. They live at No. 27 California street, Newtonville.

Over 400 students at the Newton High school, both boys and girls, have been subject to Dr. von David's tests.

According to the baron he is able to read the character of his subjects through electrical appliances. And doctors can read children's secrets by the manner in which they react certain emotions, brought on by means of electric current.

His method, the doctor declares, will show clearly the adaptability of his subjects, their usefulness along certain lines and their normal mental concentration. So it he has proved to the Newton officials that his work has not been in vain, and by knowing scientifically of a pupil's shortcomings teachers have been able to give them the benefit of special training.

TESTING CHILD'S MIND.

To take a test the doctor seats himself at a table on which are numerous electric appliances, connected with wires running into the next room, where the pupil sits at a table with two fingers of the left hand in small bowls in which is a solution which makes even the smallest current noticeable. Tests of the subject's resisting power are then made. Later, the memoranda are interpreted into a report which combines with a teachers report as to the pupil's behavior and standing in the classes.

The reports, taken at random, which were in code and were interpreted by the doctor, read as follows:

"Boy, nineteen years of age, white, father, carpenter. Technical high school graduate. Teacher's report: First year, good; second year, poor; third year, worse. Mental condition during first term and can hardly hope to graduate. Student shows intense lack of imagination. He tries hard, but fails. He knows several things and can do them at once, giving the appearance of concentration, but is unable to do so in reality. He lacks judgment.

"Girl, eighteen years of age; father, chauffeur; one of five children. Physically normal. Five years in school, was second in class; second year, dropped to third year at high school. Student is an absolutely normal child. An extensive reader and very creditable work. She is an excellent pupil and special attention should be paid to her long literary efforts, where she will prove unusually efficient.

"Girl, age nineteen; father, a laborer. Has had poor examination owing to poor nourishment and to her studies is barely fair, falling below the average. Somewhat erratic and she does not try. She is flighty and lacks concentration. Has not the ability to hold and if she tried would make an excellent scholar. Her home is largely responsible for her failing back and should be remedied. Her defects of effort could be found which would hold her attention, she would show exceptional talent.

"The Newtonville nobleman was born in Germany thirty-two years ago and brought to this country when only two years of age.

To End Catarrhal Deafness and Head Noises

Persons suffering from catarrhal deafness and head noises will be glad to know that this distressing affliction can be successfully treated at home by the following prescription, which is said to be so powerful in its effects on the mucous membranes that it has brought comfort after all else has failed. Anyone who would quickly break up a cold and relieve head full from catarrh or remove it to such an extent that the lack of a watch was plainly audible seven or eight inches away, either ear.

Therefore, if you know someone who is troubled with head noises or catarrh, or catarrhal deafness, cut out this formula and hand to them, and you will have been the means of saving them from either perhaps from total deafness. The prescription can be procured at home, and is made as follows:

Secure from your druggist 1 oz. Parmint (Double Strength) about 75 cents worth. Take this home, and add to it a pint of hot water and a little of granulated sugar, stir until dissolved. Take one tablespoonful four times a day.

The first dose should begin to relieve the distressing head noises, headache, dullness, cloudy thinking, etc., while the hearing rapidly returns as the action is carried by the blood to every part of the treatment. Loss of smell and mucous dropping in the back of the throat are other symptoms that also are said to be directly caused by catarrh, therefore there must be many people whose hearing can be restored by this simple home remedy.

Every person who is troubled with head noises, catarrhal deafness or catarrh in any form should give this prescription a trial. There is nothing better.

Mrs. C. H. K. Curtis' Daughter a Bride

PHILADELPHIA, May 15.—Miss Eleanore Pillsbury, daughter of Mrs. Cyrus H. K. Curtis, was married today to Henry Beaumont Pennell, Jr., of Portland, Me., at four o'clock at Lindon, the home of Mr. and Mrs. Curtis at Wyncote. The maid of honor was Miss Elizabeth Hart of St. Louis, and little Miss Isabel Martin, flower girl. Mr. and Mrs. Pennell will reside in Portland.

Sunday Lectures Sing Sing Convicts

OSSINING, N. Y., May 15.—Billy Sunday and "Ma" Sunday talked to a thousand convicts here today, coming from Paterson by automobile. "You've got to play the game square" Sunday said. "The man who doesn't play square is so low he needs an airship to get into Hell. I'm going to ask God to help you when you leave this place."

Coast Liner to Try Cape Canal Friday

On Friday, May 21, the Metropolitan liner James S. Whitney will pass through the Cape Cod canal on her way from Boston to New York. The Whitney will be the first ship of considerable tonnage to pass through the canal and officials of the canal and the Eastern Steamship Company are planning to make it a gala event.

The Cost of the Casket

No one realizes in a thousand has any real idea of the actual cost of a casket. The undertaking business has also been commercialized; people are not accustomed to considering comparative values applied to caskets.

If you knew a casket you paid $150 to $200 for cost the undertaker who sold it $21 to $30 you could see why I tell my story in the press. This is truth and I can prove it to anyone. Not one undertaker in Greater Boston will dispute the truth of my statements.

Think this over—I know one undertaker in the Newtons who conducted only 43 funerals in a year. How could he live if he did not make 400 to 600% profit? The same is true of hundreds of more undertakers.

Let me show you what caskets actually cost—Compare them with the prices other undertakers ask you for them.

Sound Call to Former Middies at Annapolis

NEW YORK, May 15.—That the United States naval authorities are losing no time to prepare for a possible war with Germany, should the report from the Imperial German government prove unsatisfactory, is shown by the fact that official letters have been sent to men who attended the naval academy, but did not graduate, asking them if their present occupations would permit them to report that they might report for service in the navy. It is understood that the Cabinet are not satisfied with Berlin's note to the effect that the Lusitania and other submarine attacks

The general tone of the letters was:

"Would your present business arrangements permit you to drop them at once and return to the service?"

Naval men who were graduated from Annapolis and who have resigned from the navy have been called immediately to their places if war is declared.

Rumors of Battle in the Baltic Sea

STOCKHOLM, May 15.—Shipowners arriving here today reported hearing heavy cannonading in the Baltic Sea off the island of Gotthland. They believed German and Russian fleets were engaged.

WELLESLEY CLASS CREWS IN BIG RACES

GREAT CONTESTS EXPECTED IN LAKE WABAN CLASSIC WEDNESDAY

Rowing is today king at Wellesley. The class crews have been working daily for several weeks, and are now ready for their special Spring competition, which will be held on Lake Waban next Wednesday. The event this year have aroused more than the usual interest, and close contests are expected in the various divisions.

The first crews have already been named and will devote the next few days to completing their training.

BIG MEDAL OFFER FOR MOTORISTS

Motor to Give Silver Trophy to Every Automobile Owner Who Drives Car Across U. S.

A silver medal for every automobile owner who drives his car across the continent to the Pacific Coast from [illegible] west of the Mississippi river before the close of the exposition at San Francisco and Los Angeles is the offer made by Motor of New York city, the national magazine of motoring.

The step is taken because of the [illegible] interest in motor touring in this country that has developed this year, because of the Pacific Coast expositions and the European war, which has kept many Americans from [illegible] abroad. Then, too, the incentive to tour is greater this year because of the fact that the government has decreed that on August 1 the Yellowstone National Park shall be open to motor travel. It is estimated that at least 2,000 cars will make the trip across the continent this year. Some have started already, but the bulk of the travel will begin early in June and last until late in the Fall.

Motor supplements its offer of a silver medal for every owner who makes the trip with the offer of a gold medal, 14 karats, for the best story of such a trip, while a silver cup will be given for the best photograph of a scene on such a tour regardless of the story award.

SIMPLE CONDITIONS.

Conditions governing this award are simple indeed. Red tape has been dispensed with and the only stipulation made is that the owner must check out at the start and check in at the finish in case the tourist starts from New York city he can check in with the business manager of the New York American; if he starts from Boston, the Boston AMERICAN is available. Chicago tourists can be done at the Chicago American.

Motorists with an ambition to make a trip toward the setting sun can do their start certified to by the Atlanta Georgian. In case none of these cities is passed through by the tourist Motor will be satisfied if the owner has his start certified to by the postmaster in his home city or by some other official. Another condition is that the aspirant for a Motor medal reach the point of his destination awaiting before the start.

When the Pacific Coast is reached the owner must check in at the office of either the San Francisco Examiner or the Los Angeles Examiner, certifying by affidavits as to the time he started and finished and the principal towns through which he has passed. There are no stipulations—all that is required is to drive to the Pacific Coast.

GOLD MEDAL FOR BEST STORY.

As for the gold medal award, that trophy is offered for the best descriptive story of such a tour, accompanied of course by suitable photographs. These articles need not be more than 2,500 or 3,000 words in length and there should be at least a dozen photographs submitted with each article.

Motor also has prepared a pamphlet on transcontinental touring, written by A. L. Westgard, who has made ten complete trips from ocean to ocean in an automobile. Mr. Westgard gives expert advice as to the various routes and their conditions, and as to the tourist what is necessary in the way of extra equipment. Accompanying this pamphlet is an up to date map, also prepared by Mr. Westgard, showing the principal routes from ocean to ocean. This pamphlet is furnished free upon application either in person or by mail to Motor, No. 119 West Fortieth street, New York City.

MOTOR SOLONS COME TO BOSTON FOR CONFERENCE

Many Matters Pertaining to Government of Motorists and Construction of Good Roads Will Be Thoroughly Considered; Delegates Coming From All Sections.

By J. C. KERRISON

The annual meeting of the American Automobile Association, to be held in this city tomorrow, promises to be one of the most interesting and important in the annals of the organization. Many matters pertaining to the government of motorists, the registration and taxation of the same, the matter of touring and [illegible] of good roads will be gone into in a minute manner.

The subject which will attract the greatest attention at this meeting is that of automobile taxation, which is something that affects every individual owner of automobiles.

The Winter season of the state legislatures portrayed a wholesome tendency to call upon motor car owners for increased registration fees, despite the fact that in 1914 the total contributed by motorists of this country exceeded twelve millions of dollars.

In connection with this fact [illegible] Boston today is the Preside[illegible] John A. Wilkinson of the A. A. A., who, by the way is the unofficial candidate for re-election. [illegible] Massachusetts.

[illegible] located on Stewart street [illegible] the city hall. Here [illegible] the leading lights of the [illegible] of the association with [illegible] be held in the evening.

At the big quiet John A. Wilkinson president of the A. A. A. will preside and there will be addresses by Governor Samuel W. McCall, Mayor James M. Curley, Colonel A. W. Dimock, chairman of the Massachusetts Highway Commission; D. H. Sweers president of the Massachusetts Automobile Association; Charles T. Terry of New York, who is entitled to a [illegible] by pertaining to national legislation, Hon. Samuel L. Powers of Boston, and George [illegible] Bishop of Buffalo chairman of the A. A. A. Good Roads Board.

While the ladies are [illegible] to the Copley Plaza, the latter who accompany them here will be the guests of the local ladies' committee at an dinner and entertainment at the Arlington. The local committee of ladies is headed by Mrs. J. H. MacAlman, wife of the president of the Boston Automobile Dealers' Association and the other members are Mrs. George W. Sweet, wife of the president of the Bay State Automobile Association, Mrs. John J. Kennedy, Mrs. Thomas Hodgson, Mrs. A. J. Underhill, Mrs. Kilgore, Mrs. H. P. DeNormandie, Mrs. Morris and Mrs. Burden.

Tuesday will come the ride over the royal route of Paul Revere to Concord, during the local committee of which L. B. Spears is chairman, is planning to supply a New England lunch at Concord. The return trip will be by way of Cambridge

JUST SCRATCHED THE SURFACE

[illegible] Wilman, automobile manufacturer of Philadelphia, a large dealer who was in Boston during the week, for a new reason for the great automobile business it has a company and in fact all the [illegible] this Spring.

"[illegible] propose ask no favors," said Mr. Wilman, "in face of business conditions which the automobile business seems to crowd ahead with leaps and bounds. In the first place I do not believe that business conditions are bad and I think there is altogether too much pessimistic depression. Our figures show that business conditions are excellent just now.

But let us take the pessimistic pessimist at his word and say that business conditions are not good. There is a perfectly logical dependence on the fact that the company has begun to achieve its possibilities in sales at any time. [illegible] of the automobile industry. We have just scratched the surface. I think I am safe in saying that there are considerably less than one salesman to Greater Boston. These salesmen are covering a population of [illegible] and of course I do not care to say that the entire population are immediate prospects. I [illegible] your own neighborhood, for instance, look up the people on your street. How many have automobiles? Only about one in [illegible] of them. I will venture to say that the remaining two-thirds in the average good residential district almost half of them can afford an automobile and should have one. Why [illegible] of the cities really be classified as well? Less [illegible] than per cent of [illegible] and even those who have been [illegible] by salesmen have not [illegible] followed up. We have [illegible] to sell automobiles [illegible] that is a complaint [illegible] upon the dealers. All I feel sure can be given several good reasons why the should own a motor car.

[illegible] difficult of selling automobiles to [illegible] is talking for the main [illegible] of the [illegible] our [illegible] before [illegible] to [illegible] to any part of the sales [illegible] to take up more [illegible] people. CRUCIAL FIGHT ON B. & M. BILL DUE TOMORROW

Battle to Be Made on Protection of Savings Bank Depositors and to Throw off Hampden.

Supporters of a score of amendments to the Boston & Maine reorganization bill will be subjected to its second test tomorrow in the House of Representatives.

Some twenty-odd efforts to change the bill here and elsewhere, have been announced. The final fight will narrow down to two propositions

(1) Whether in its haste to assist the Boston & Maine, the Legislature shall entirely forget the savings banks and submit them to an unnecessary risk.

(2) Whether the Hampden Railroad shall be forced on to the Boston & Maine stockholders?

The Boston & Maine reorganization bill is not, strange as it may seem, a railroading proposition. It is a financial proposition, pure and simple.

It is important to the State that the Boston & Maine Railroad should be rehabilitated. Few things are more important than the Boston & Maine to this community, but one of those more important things is the safety of our savings banks.

Massachusetts was a pioneer among the States of the Union in the creation of the savings bank institution. The State has surrounded it with the strongest safeguards and relying upon the protection of the Commonwealth our people have invested their little savings in these institutions.

One of the safeguards which the State has thrown around the savings banks is the law which forbids the trustees of these banks from investing the money of their depositors in the stocks or bonds of a railroad until it has paid 4 per cent. upon its entire capitalization for five successive preceding years. The payment of these dividends for five years make the test of the safety of the stock.

WHERE DANGER LIES.

Now comes the Boston & Maine reorganization bill, which strikes down this safeguard of the general law and provides that the money of the savings bank depositors may be invested in the securities of the new Boston & Maine road on the payment of 4 per cent. on the stock of this new corporation for only one year on only one-half its capitalization and debt. The payment of a dividend is not a test of the safety of the stock for a dividend may be paid which is not earned by the railroad.

Those who framed the safeguard of the general law thought this danger could be avoided, by providing that the payments should be made for five successive years, believing that it was not possible for a road to pay dividends that it did not earn for five years, but the recent history of the New Haven and the Boston & Maine has proved that it is possible and that the money of the savings bank depositors may be used by the New Haven and the Boston & Maine long after they had ceased to be dividends which the law required them to pay as a criterion of their safety for savings bank investments.

Therefore, if the requirement of twenty years of payment on the entire capitalization of a railroad was not sufficient because of the Boston & Maine and the New Haven experience, it is certainly clear that the mere payment of a dividend of 4 per cent. on half the capitalization of the Boston & Maine for only one year, is no protection at all for the savings bank depositors.

TO PAY IS NOT TO EARN.

But if it were required that the dividends paid as well as pay these dividends would be a measure of protection. To earn a dividend is above profit and while a road is showing a profit its securities are safe. Many do pay a dividend always because dividends, in the case of the Boston & Maine and the New Haven were paid out of borrowed money for a number of years before the entire payment of a dividend is less than no protection, for it is a temptation to any railroad that has not earned its borrowing ones to do it. If the payment of a dividend is made the test of its legality as a savings bank investment

Clearly the law should require the Boston & Maine reorganization that the dividends should be earned as well as paid. If the requirement of the general law had been that the railroads should earn as well as pay dividends for four years before they could become a savings bank investments, the New Haven would not be in the condition it is today, nor would the Boston & Maine, for it could not have declared dividends if it did not earn, and the public would have known the true condition of the roads which the financiers were carefully concealing.

In spite of the stress it is a criminal offense to pay dividend out of capital, or out of borrowed money. It ought to be so in Massachusetts and in any event, the savings banks ought not to be allowed to put their depositors' money in to the securities of this new corporation until it had demonstrated its ability to earn its dividends.

HAMPDEN OPPOSITION.

The opposition which developed against the Hampden railroad at the time its representatives were elected in private conference with the old railroad commission relative to the issuance of bonds, and which has developed with each succeeding stage of its doubtful financial career, has appeared in the Legislature. The opposition of the freedom-loving members of the House is to prevent the inclusion of the Hampden in the Boston & Maine bill.

United States District Attorney George W. Anderson forecasted the opposition the Hampden would meet when he addressed the Railroad Committee of the Legislature some two months ago when the Boston & Maine bill was first under consideration.

At that time Mr. Anderson declared the Federal-appointed trustees of the Boston & Maine Railroad made a serious mistake by including the Hampden Railroad in the Boston & Maine bill. I have it from railroad experts that the Hampden is not essential to the operation of the Boston & Maine and that as a strictly railroad proposition the Hampden should never be considered. During arguments before the committee, Frank G. Webster, counsel of Joseph H. Hyman, asserted that he, too was opposed to the Hampden section of the bill. In the Boston & Maine bill he and other clients favor the Hooper-Cahill bill, from this source, should the members of the committee not be persuaded by the Hampden song.

The evil, most of it, that has stirred the people against the Boston & Maine, even before the Hooper bill was introduced, is the fact that which may lead to open fight. The right to invest from the savings bank investment law, according to foes of the Hampden, Boston & Maine bill is the unwarranted "only option" to be protected.

LOBBY HAS BEEN BUSY.

As a result of their visit Railroad Committee reports Hampden section of the B. & M. bill. Its friends [illegible] in every possible way to [illegible] original Hampden [illegible] to the committee.

LAWRENCE AND FRENCH OPPOSE PRESENT REORGANIZATION BILL

William B. Lawrence, a large minority stockholder of the Boston & Maine Railroad, who opposes the bill for reorganization, said last night: "Unless more than the earnings of the road are being padded in a fashion to hide its real earning power.

He declared that supplies which would normally be bought during a two-year period have been delayed by eight months period, bring up the earnings of the two years and thus making the earnings seem less than they really are.

The reorganization bill allows the road [illegible] two-thirds vote of stockholders to levy an assessment of $15 a share. The proceeds would be used to [illegible] Seven to eight [illegible] necessary to put the road on its feet. Mr. Lawrence declared necessity of borrowing in new issues. In discussing the [illegible] lines which he hopes is in progress, he said:

"It is a well recognized method of making a Wall street drive against a railroad, to diminish its earning capacity, to impair its credit to put it into debt, to divert its traffic and then to come forward as one of the road's principal creditors.

"This was the way the New Haven got control of the New England railroad about twenty years ago, through the control of its mortgage debt.

"The regular Wall street method is [illegible] a drive on the Boston & Maine railroad has been pursued from start to finish. Bond [illegible] have been kept down by diverting high grade freight from the Boston & Maine, where it originated, at the first junction point where it could [illegible] Boston & Albany and other [illegible]

"The regular Wall street method is further [illegible] by forcing [illegible] early for supplies, locking up cash in supplies so as to make the cash [illegible]

"Last year the Boston & Maine [illegible] million and a half dollars worth [illegible] Seven to eight times the [illegible] worth of those [illegible] feet. Mr. Lawrence [illegible] the contract.

"Instead of using the word of [illegible] Boston ending June 30, 1914, in that [illegible] a large part of it was put in the [illegible] year from that date to the present, and instead of spreading the work that could be done after June 30, 1915, over the future, a large part of it is being done now.

"So work that would ordinarily and rightfully be spread over two years is being done in about eight months. Expenditures for supplies are being concentrated, so that the road shall make a bad showing as to earnings, compared to the preceding fiscal year.

"The million and a half dollars worth of ties were bought at $1 each apiece. Better ties could have been [illegible]

"When the Massachusetts legislature passed the 'Nothing Bill' submitted just before I was directed to [illegible] the bills in equity which had been [illegible] of the Boston & Maine. General Bonaparte, for the federal government, [illegible] against the two roads, I excited indignation in certain quarters by testifying to [illegible] that the statute had betrayed the citizens of [illegible]

"The rights of the minority stockholders, which I feel sure it does [illegible] if the bill is to be passed, should not be [illegible] and [illegible] entered into and incurred which can hardly be denied when it ought not to have the support of any decent citizen. An enlightened and competent receiver, [illegible] under the impartial control of the court would be far preferable, I believe, to legislation which is fairly open to such criticism."

MR. BUYER!

GEORGE GROW AUTOMOBILE CO.:

No. 1—We specialize in High Grade Slightly Used Cars.

No. 2—We will not sell for anybody cars that have not a standard market value.

No. 3—When you wish to dispose of a car purchased of us you have to take only a small depreciation.

No. 4—We will not receive on sale cars that are not in the best of mechanical condition.

No. 5—The private individual will sell his car to you and you have no protection.

No. 6—In buying from us you have 30 days to test your car in every way. We replace imperfect parts free of charge.

No. 7—We sell cars for "HALF DOWN AND BALANCE MONTHLY," which proves that our cars are as represented.

No. 8—We sell lower than anyone in the business and have the largest stock to select from.

No. 9—Compare our cars and prices with those offered for sale by others.

No. 10—We have based the market value on light-grade used cars for a number of years.

No. 11—We are the people that will not allow you to pay exorbitant prices for used cars.

No. 12—We will not combine with MANUFACTURERS, AGENTS FOR NEW AND USED CARS, OR PERIODICALS TO HOLD UP THE PRICES.

No. 13—We are selling at the rate of 60 cars each week.

No. 14—We have sold enough cars in New England to prove that our statements are true.

No. 15—These satisfied customers have told their friends and this is what has made our business what it is today.

No. 16—We have a waiting list that will purchase nowhere else. They have dealt with us before and know our methods of doing business.

The House of Good Trades!

Our Motto: "Fair and Honest to All."

Our present stock of touring cars, roadsters and trucks we are marking down to such low prices that they are bound to move at once. Make up your mind to come in, look over stock and compare our prices with others. We positively defy competition on the prices we are placing on our stock of cars this week.

Besides the cars we have mentioned below we have 100 others in touring cars and roadsters at very attractive prices. Every car in our building has been overhauled, and in most cases repainted. Read carefully and don't fail to call and let us prove to you that we can save you money. Every car fully equipped and trial allowed.

By JULIAN HAWTHORNE.

BOSTON is alive, remembering and revering its past. Salem is dead, and is itself that past which Boston reverences and remembers.

Of course, this statement will not bear logical examination, and I am not sure whether Salem or Boston will appreciate it most. If Salem be dead, it is a case of such unusually perfect embalmment and mummification. And if it be the object of Boston's pious regards, the fact is not obvious in current conversation or even in Bostonian reminiscent moods.

Nevertheless, I will let the statement stand. Truth is not always consistent with fact, and it is a folly to rely upon fact alone, which we are ever and anon haunted by perplexities hardly less embarrassing than are those which result from denying fact altogether.

Both towns began life as Puritan settlements, nearly identical in spirit, and materially near enough together, even in those days of bridle-path travel, to make the voice of Naumkeag almost audible on Agamenticus.

But the life of Boston had its uninterrupted evolution down to the present day, that of Salem, retaining in their vividness idiosyncrasies which were progressively softened in its neighbor, reached surprising energy during a period entirely brief, and then, abruptly, ceased.

Wraps for Summertime Combine Useful with the Beautiful

New Models Are Richly Trimmed with Fur That Contrasts Effectively with White and Color Fabrics

AMONG the necessities of the coming season are coats of lighter materials trimmed with fur. Some of these are merely breakers of cotton or embossed cashmere, put together in some intricate fashion that suggests nothing more elegant than a coat we glimpse when we peep at the linings of the garments in the shop windows.

Some many fashions introduced for the summer, these wraps are for decorative effect rather than for actual service. In many instances, they do not seem to be more than a fanciful negligee, cut in hip length and plaited from a loose yoke. This type of wrap is not pretty, but as the original bears the signature of one of the biggest designers in Paris, it has been duplicated in domestic styles.

White fox is the fur in greatest demand for the trimming of such summer wraps. The color is cool and this is saying something for a pelt which gives quite as much warmth as lynx, sealskin or caracul. Those who can afford the highest grade of white fox have been acquiring scarfs of that pelt to go with the wrap which is otherwise lacking in enough garniture.

However, for the great mass of women who wish to be fashionable at a reasonable cost, it will not be necessary to forego the luxury of fur with a will, probably wear rather than the fad lasts and no regret if one is discarded without regret if one fool still expends. The only drawback to pat regarding the fur is that the white turns yellow very readily and in play and to get straight prettily with a cleaning.

THE VERANDA WRAP

The mercerized cotton poplin for the wrap. The wrap is among the number of long silk bathrobes for the girl who will double as a wrap of gorgeous metal brocade, all over or in parts but on the whole the color of white or of pale pink, rose and blue will be the one in greatest demand.

Ostrich feather fur is dyed the color of the wrap material are being used to border the hem and to trim the outstanding collar of many new models. Many women have learned that swansdown makes a very decorative trimming for dainty and unpretentious wraps. Moreover, it has an element of youth that is frequently lacking in a more formal fur garniture.

Marabou seems to be equally as an all-time garniture for the Summer class. It is to be had in the delicate pastel tones as black and in the natural brown. The last is infinitely more effective than the others, because it approaches the decorative richness of fur.

Black is apt to rub off and so the throat and the gloves of ones where the sleeve ends come in contact therewith. Nevertheless, now that white and black combinations are seen in every department and accessory of women's wear, black marabou will doubtless be chosen to band the wrap of white satin or taffeta.

Jeanne Lanvin has been using quilted bands of silk and satin for the decoration of her suits and wraps during the last several months. This offers an excellent trimming suggestion for separate coats of a more dressy persuasion, which may be worn with good effect either for afternoon or evening. The body of the garment is of plain silk or satin and the deep collar and wide cuffs are hand quilted, usually in diamond outline.

Another scheme of decoration runs to the use of metal or beaded fringes, narrow in width and not too extravagant in their gutter. Jet and crystal are highly favored for this sort of garniture. The fringes are so deep than formerly and seem to be merely a suggestion of grandeur rather than a marked effort toward questionable elegance.

TOUCH OF EMBROIDERY.

Touches of hand embroidery introduced in floss or metal threads are considered very good taste for wrap or dress embellishment. The chain stitching designs introduced earlier in the season have become very popular with American women because of their simplicity. Moreover, one may easily eliminate the design from a garment if the ensemble proves unsatisfactory after its completion. A minimum of gilt threads is to be preferred to a solid mass of the same.

Kime kid is used to some extent for coat completion. Its greatest field of usefulness is in connection with the motor coat, because the kid is not only durable and to a certain extent warmer, but because it may readily be cleansed. White is one of the leading favorites for the completion of coats of white or of dark blue, tan, brown or green.

The mixtures of which many of the motor coats are made call for a collar of colored kid, and mistress rapidly green and blue are in use. mand.

It is considered very good taste to have the lining of the motor coat match the outside. Therefore, in order to increase its popularity [illegible] and green and [illegible] and [illegible] and [illegible] Ordinarily the fair patron will select a veil of the color of her coat trimming and thereby maintain a certain harmony in the creation of apparel and her machine.

PROVIDED WITH SWEATER

The wise woman provides herself with one or more sweaters for the outing season. A heavy sweater should always be kept on hand for the long motor trip and for wear on the beach a sweater of lighter weight will be found a necessity. Just now there is so much variety in the colors and patterns of sweaters that there is no danger of style monotony following the possession of more than one of these convenient garments.

Certain of the silk sweaters are trimmed with fur, and others are garnished with bands of fur. The woman with good taste will be likely be attracted toward these as there is something a little [illegible] gerous in the association of a garment of an outing character with garniture identified with gala apparel. Nevertheless, the inclusion of these indicates a broader selection than has existed since the old days of sweater introduction.

The coat of white chinchilla is being very well received despite the fact that this is the third season of its popularity. Corduroy coats are liked, because they do not show the wear and tear needed upon their use as they have a certain style not associated with coats of other fabrics. The one drawback about corduroy is that it must be of really excellent quality to look like anything at all or to give satisfactory wear. There are many inferior grades on the market, and these, in a way, have interfered with the prestige of the better kind.

White corduroy launders almost as well as linen, and this in itself makes it appeal to women of practical tastes. Of course, the lining is sometimes in the way of perfect renovation, but there are little coats to be had made with [illegible] and [illegible] and [illegible] and

RECITAL FILLS JORDAN HALL

Bauer-Gabrilovitsch Program of Compositions for Two Pianos Pleases Audience.

A capacity audience greeted what was richly announced as the program as "An extraordinary event," the appearance of Harold Bauer and Josip Gabrilovitsch in a joint recital of composition for two pianos, yesterday afternoon in Jordan Hall.

That the special sort of composition is dear to the hearts of piano students, and many other lovers of the instrument, was attested by the applause.

The opening number was the "Andante and Variations," opus forty-six of Robert Schumann. The playing of this composition was uniform in interest and portrayal, and the mutual subordination of the pianos at the recitative moments, the bringing out of the solo lines, the inter-weaving of the subsidiary themes, the modulation of the harmonies and general coloring were admirable.

The second number of Carl Reinecke still bore the flavor of Schumann, being an "Impromptu" on a theme of this composer, and treated by his no freer and lighter.

The remainder of the program was given to pieces for two pianos by Mozart, Saint Saens and Arensky, thus representing all ages, countries and schools of composition.

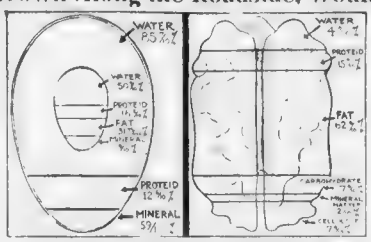
NUTS, Grown Along the Roadside, Would Be CHEAP, HEALTHFUL SUBSTITUTES for MEAT and Other Foods



FOOD VALUES OF EGGS AND WALNUTS COMPARED
At the Right, the Walnut, on Left, the Egg, the Large Oval Representing the White and the Small One the Yolk

The composition of some varieties of nuts so resembles that of meat that it is easy for the cook to prepare a great number of dishes which so closely resemble meats in appearance as well as in chemical composition, that meat of all sorts may be readily dispensed with without being seriously missed.

Some years ago I was requested by the Assistant Secretary of Agriculture to experiment for the purpose of endeavoring to produce from vegetable sources a satisfactory substitutes for meat. As the result of my experiment I found that by a combination of peanuts and the gluten of wheat a preparation could be made which resembles meat so closely that it is easily taken for potted veal or some other meat product. These nut meats can be prepared on a large scale at a price far below the cost of producing beef, besides having the advantage that, while furnishing to the body every useful element that can be derived from meat, they are absolutely free from tuberculosis, tape worm and other forms of disease to which flesh foods are more or less liable.

"Mock Turkey," Made Entirely of Nuts. It Looks and Tastes Exactly Like the "Real Thing" and Is More Nourishing and Easier to Digest

The one possible solution of the food problem for the United States, as well as the other densely populated countries is to be found in the return to the primitive diet of nuts, with fruits, cereals, vegetables and a little dairy products. To go back as fierce a beast as roams the forest to live on fruits, nuts and tender shoots ample strength to support the prodigious energy which he displays. The strongest of land animals, the elephant, and the fleetest, the deer and enduring animal the camel, are both fearless diet as to also, for the millions teeming millions of China, Japan, India and Central Africa

Pins Good for Cigars.

A NEW idea in cigarmaking is to cut off the tips of the cigars and to use a pin about two inches long and closely resembling the wax removed. Being of the same color as the cigar, the pin does not detract from its appearance—in fact, you would never notice it unless you looked very closely. When you want to smoke one of these cigars you pull out this pin. You don't have to bite or cut off the end and the cigars are always ready to smoke easily and draw well.

A Divining Rod To Find Needles.

A NEW ENGLAND surgeon has devised an ingenious means of locating a piece of steel which have become buried in the body. The divining rod is magnetized by passing a magnet over it and is then held over the body where it is suspected to be. Then another needle, suspended on a fine silk thread, is passed over the same locality. The pole of the suspended needle will attract and repel the poles of the surgeon's needle, causing the latter to swing around parallel to the axis of the buried needle. If there is a pair of poles nearer than the other, there will be a corresponding pair of the examining needle, and in this way a "divining rod" is made. By this means the buried needle may be located with great accuracy. This provides a far simpler and readier means of locating a buried piece of steel than the use of X Rays.

Miss Gabrielle Ray, the Most Beautiful Girl on the English Musical Comedy Stage, Mourning for the Sportsman Hero Whom She Will Remarry If He Lives.

ONE of the most remarkable features of the great war has been the transformation of many spendthrifts into real heroes. Young men of title and fortune who, up till six months ago, did little but back the horses and encourage the lighter forms of dramatic art, are now holding the shell-torn trenches or charging across the death-swept, wire-entangled plain.

It is a matter of general remark that those who were the most reckless and extravagant in peace time proved the bravest in war. There is an interesting psychological problem behind the fact.

Many of them, of course, have been killed, but others have been promoted and are now models of patriotism instead of being shocking examples to the young.

There is the Duke of Westminster, for instance, the most extravagant and, be it said, the most unblushing spendthrift of his rank in the world. He enjoys an income of $800,000 a year, mostly from property in the West End of London, and he used to spend practically all of this on sport and the theatrical profession, but now he is fighting like a hero and saving his income.

The Duke has contributed to the success of nearly every noted stage beauty for the past twenty years. He distributed his friendship impartially between British and foreign talent. He was quite an admirer of the exquisitely beautiful Miss Gabrielle Ray, the equally lovely Miss Lily Elsie, both of London, and the statuesque beautiful Regina Badet, of Paris; but he had an especially warm friendship for Miss Gertie Millar, the fascinating star of London's Gaiety Theatre.

So constantly was the Duke in Miss Millar's company that the handsome Duchess of Westminster became furiously jealous. When she found that remonstrance with the Duke proved unavailing she endeavored to arouse his jealousy by acting very skittishly.

It was the way people in society talked about the case that nettled the Duchess.

"Rather odd that Toodles should always be running after some Gaiety girl when his wife's so good looking," one of them would say. "Toodles," by the way, is society's pet name for the Duke.

"Oh," the other person would answer, "those actresses are so amusing and entertaining. Looks don't count for much compared to that."

It was always the same story. "So amusing and entertaining!" The Duchess sizzled with anger. She—a Cornwallis-West—a member of the most amusing and entertaining family in English society. Her mother, Mrs. Cornwallis West, still a sprightly matron, was declared by the late King Edward to be the most amusing woman in England, and he was a judge.

Her sister, Daisy, who married the Prince of Pless, is considered as lively as she is beautiful. And the Duchess has generally been looked on as the brightest star of this lively family. But a bright star of the aristocracy may perhaps be a little less bright than a Gaiety girl!

"I will show them whether I can be as amusing and entertaining as that girl!" exclaimed the Duchess, stamping her pretty aristocratic foot.

Then she went to work and planned the amateur theatrical show at her country residence, Eaton Hall, one of the finest places in England.

She made them open their eyes. She played the part of a wild harum-scarum tomboy girl. Most of the time she wore a sweater and a skirt that reached about to her knees, with silk stockings and low shoes. She leaped over hedges, rode a racehorse in mannish fashion, slid down the bannisters, crawled through windows, put her feet on the mantelpiece, smoked cigarettes—in short, did everything that could be included under the term "lively."

Incidentally she displayed a perfectly admirable set of underpinnings, unquestionably as fine a set as could be found on the British stage. They were gracefully [illegible] just where they ought to be slender. They were winsome and delicate and yet had the firmness that comes from [illegible] doing to and fro [illegible] riding, swimming, [illegible] everything else you can think of.

[illegible] held all [illegible] throughout the whole play, insisting themselves irresistibly into the affairs of the spectators. One scene [illegible] breathless. The duchess sat on a [illegible] smoking a cigarette, dropped [illegible] crossed her legs and [illegible] [illegible] possessed [illegible] instead of Teddy [illegible] Dean.

[illegible] "Oh, quite, quite," said the other.

The Duchess didn't bring the Duke back but she made him highly indignant. Evidently he did not agree that what was sauce for a duchess was sauce for a duke. He said she was acting in a very undignified manner for a duchess, and then both of them threatened to get a divorce. It was only the urgent interference of the King and Queen that prevented a tremendous scandal.

The Duke has now gone to the front in northern France as a staff officer and dispatch bearer. He rescued his friend Captain Grenfell, the polo player, under heavy fire and it is stated would have received the Victoria Cross if his act had been witnessed by a superior officer.

The Duke has grown quite serious, and the Duchess has been deeply touched by his heroism, so that they have both become reconciled and will live together if he comes back alive.

But poor Gertie Millar has had to give up the luxurious limousine which was the envy of the theatrical profession.

Indeed, many of the stage beauties have been severely hit by the war. The direct returns of theatrical labor have been very much reduced and the various outside sources of income have been in many cases entirely cut off.

The two most winsome beauties of the English stage are perhaps Gabrielle Ray and Lily Elsie. Miss Ray married Evelyn Boyle, a gay, young English millionaire and sportsman after leaving him once "waiting at the church." Within a year she obtained a divorce. Since then he has proved himself a hero on the battlefield, and it is said his beautiful wife will remarry him if he lives.

The Poet Rostand's Sonnet to Bernhardt's Severed Leg

This Is the Sonnet "To Sarah"

By Edmond Rostand, the Famous French Poet

THOU who madest of genius one long test
Of heroism, how thou must have craved
The destiny of those who would have saved
The valley where they lie at glorious rest!
"Oh, let me have a wound like theirs!" saidst thou.
"And let it tear and bring me close to death."
Thy shoulders have two wings while thou hast breath.
To thy one heel the world respondeth now!
Remorse is not for thee, for thou hast aimed
To make thyself like those our martyrs maimed—
The while they bled, thou bledst for all thy race.
So set thy sail where blows the wind most free!
The steel with which we sought a Samothrace
Has marred the Muse and made a Victory!

The Surprising Revelation By the Great Poet That Mme. Sarah Bernhardt Had Her Right Leg Amputated As An Heroic Example to the Brave Soldiers Who Are Facing Death and Mutilation in the Trenches

"The Divine Sarah," in the Costume She Designed for Herself as a Sculptress.

The Skull Given Her by Victor Hugo Which She Carries With Her Always.

Mme. Bernhardt Sleeping in the Specially designed Coffin That She Used for a Bed for Months. One of the Eccentricities of the Great Actress That Makes Rostand's Extraordinary Revelation Credible.

Paris, May 8.

THE apotheosis of Sarah Bernhardt is achieved. In the eyes of every French soldier the great actress must henceforth appear as little less than a saint. Her greatest and closest friend, the poet Edmond Rostand, has brought this about.

Rostand in a sonnet addressed "To Sarah" has told to the world the remarkable declaration in [illegible] poetic imagery—that it was not necessary for Sarah Bernhardt to have her leg amputated. She condemned herself to that ordeal because of an almost frenzied desire to share in the sufferings and humiliations endured by the brave soldier defenders of her country; and, perhaps, as an example to them of fortitude, not exacted by duty but voluntarily imposed on herself for an ideal.

She had borne the painful lameness in her right knee for several years. The injury was not a menace to her life, or even to her general health so her physicians agreed. But with that pleading ex[illegible] for permission to face death as French soldiers face it every hour of every day, she overruled her doctors and went to the operating table.

News of the operation that removed Sarah Bernhardt's right leg above the knee was cabled to every part of the world. The physicians who issued bulletins of the progress of the actress' rapid recovery let it be understood that Bernhardt's leg could not have been saved. It was not for these simple gentlemen to divine the inspiration of a patriotic motive which inspired the world's greatest tragedienne to complete her career as a cripple.

As the sequel shows, that was Rostand's task. And who could have accomplished it with more splendid effect? Let his sonnet "To Sarah," a translation of which is herewith transmitted, speak for itself.

It is quite true that Bernhardt's knee had become very troublesome. A few months ago its persistent swelling kept her in bed for more than a week. And there were times when it did not bother her at all. The original injury occurred six years ago, when she knocked her knee against something while traveling on an ocean steamship. In an interview early in the present year she said of it:

I thought nothing of the injury at first, and would not have it attended to. That was unfortunate, for water gathered under the knee cap and forced the smooth surface of the bone, sometimes causing me a great deal of bother, and then, for weeks at a time, totally [illegible] at all. Lately I have had [illegible] with it and [illegible] for [illegible] at the [illegible] which so many of them are forced to endure.

This is the Sarah Bernhardt of today, who is to be seventy-first year. Throughout her long career [illegible] with universal admission of her genius and [illegible] eccentricities which outdid those of any other living woman.

The Strange Case of Rev. Dr. Darnell

The Earnest and Respected Pastor of a Successful Church, Suddenly Unmasked, Defiantly Sneers at Morality and Holy Matrimony and "Those Absurd Conventions That Are Called Laws."

A MINISTER of the Gospel in [illegible] Government with violation of the White Slave Law—the case of the Rev. James Morrison Darnell—among instances of erring [illegible]. Even before charges were brought against the former pastor of the Unitarian Church at Kenosha, Wis., he had broken all records for clerical breaches of conventional morality. [illegible]

But [illegible] Rev. Mr. Darnell [illegible] these misdeeds. In an [illegible] he [illegible] and [illegible] a mistake and had gone West and [illegible] until [illegible] and [illegible] woman found him and when she wanted [illegible] his identity, the priest said: "I gave the boy back to [illegible] not know it," replied the old woman. "But you've [illegible] What you need is to wake up and get that man's [illegible] the real life." Mr. Darnell declared to his intimates [illegible] that too many people were already spiritually dead [illegible] and that in the words of the homely old woman [illegible] to wake them up.

He spoke of his five months' old boy and declared that he hoped that this boy would never join the great army of down and outs but should be some time get to that place [illegible] along with the priest he wanted to feel, and he felt, that there would be some one who would wake him [illegible] to the new and higher life.

The occasion was so impressive that tears came to the eyes of the parishioners as the minister raised his hand [illegible] the benediction. "God witness between you and me while we are separated, and give you peace."

Had the Rev. Mr. Darnell been reading "The Scarlet Letter," to his study and wrote the sermon [illegible] It was delivered from his pulpit [illegible] was [illegible] with a prayer of [illegible] held the entire congregation. The subject was "The Man Who Is Down and Out."

He declared that the "Down and Out" [illegible] people of the world [illegible] man who [illegible] the man who [illegible] fatal mistake and had gone West and [illegible] until [illegible] and [illegible] woman found him and when she wanted [illegible] his identity, the priest said: "I gave the boy back to [illegible] not know it," replied the old woman. "But you've [illegible] What you need is to wake up and get that man's [illegible] the real life." Had the Rev. Mr. Darnell been reading "The Scarlet Letter,"

Rev. Mr. Darnell's Brazen Confession.

"LOVE under the espionage of chaperones, [illegible] all its enslaving vows, wedded life [illegible] a pari with a woman of whom you may [illegible] whom you may come even to hate—it's all wrong. It is [illegible] insane conventions that shackle our [illegible] going to do them. It is antiquated conventions. I refuse [illegible]

Thus Rev. James Morrison Darnell, the "marrying parson" of Kenosha, Wis., defends his acquisition of three, perhaps more, "wives," whose accidental discovery of their "husband's" proclivity for multiple marriage has resulted in his being forced to resign the pastorate of the Universalist Church of Kenosha, the shaming of a divorce by one of the "wives" and the instigation of Federal and two State investigations in the name of public morality.

"I'm ahead of my times, perhaps," he admits, "and I may have to pay a penalty of some kind for infringing those absurd conventions that are called laws. But I am ready to pay. I will be a martyr, gladly, if my sacrifice will restore one grain of sense to convention-mad society."

In the course of a casual interview the Rev. Mr. Darnell admitted, with as little hesitation as he confessed himself a pioneer in the "new life," a seeker after the ideal and a believer in trial marriages, that he had lived as the husband of at least three young women. He not only admitted it, he boasted of it. He justified his private life, his maintenance of three separate households at the same time, with his public life as a minister of the Gospel.

"It is god's way," he said. "God's way is love's way, for God is love. God never intended that love and marriage should be a catch as catchean game, wherein one chooses blindly the mate he is to take unto himself for the remainder of his days."

No qualms of conscience troubled him last September, the Rev. Mr. Darnell said, when he installed pretty Ruth Soper, of Owatonna, Minn., in the parsonage and introduced her as the bride to the good men and women of Kenosha as his wife and lived, although he had never gone through any marriage ceremony with her and although at that time another pretty girl in Avon, Ill., Ethel Spurgeon by name, claimed the right to call [illegible] wife.

His conscience was at peace when, a few weeks later, on the pretext of "a business trip," he went to Chicago and [illegible] seventeen-year-old Doris Vaughn to the marriage altar.

[illegible] harassed his soul during the many [illegible] households going [illegible] as his duties as pastor of a church [illegible] to leave Kenosha for visits to Avon and Chicago.

"I was honest with myself," he said. "I was [illegible] with a woman. I was trying to learn which was [illegible] to be my companion for life. By familiarizing myself with [illegible] those whom I would have rejected, I was doing them a great kindness. I was not going to hold them to lives which would have been intolerable for them as well as for me."

The marrying parson viewed with equanimity the scandal and [illegible] which followed upon discovery of [illegible] The marriage [illegible] of his Kenosha church [illegible] Doris Vaughn Darnell, the [illegible] Mann [illegible] investigations, the denunciation [illegible] the press and the demand of the public that he be [illegible] for the [illegible] he would had suffered.

[illegible] emphasized the soundness of his philosophy when he said:

All the clamor, all the haste of [illegible] friends to mount [illegible] their pedestals of virtue and [illegible] the black sheep, all the hue and cry for a victim—all will only [illegible] to the great god Convention.

The Rev. Mr. Darnell sums up his philosophy in four paragraphs:

1. It's no use trying to fetter Cupid. It can't be done. The instant that loving is made a duty it is no longer loving. It is enslavement.

2. He who loves and runs away will live to love another day.

3. Some girls know how to cook and sew, others how to talk and look pretty. The hard job is to find a girl who can cook, sew, talk well and look pretty.

4. Modern society is a mass of hypocrisy. It requires of its votaries that they live a lifelong lie, and the wonder of it is that the most of them manage to live it.

"You know we are an awful lot of hypocrites," the marrying parson remarked. "A few weeks ago I heard a lecture delivered by one of the best known professors of the University of Chicago. He talked of 'the new life.'

"He said in the course of his remarks that in a short time all women would have learned the importance of that 'freedom in possession of woman's latent powers.'

"The class of women applauded this sentiment vigorously. Yet, brought face to face with the facts of life, few women have the courage or determination to look at these facts squarely."

The minister pitched his chair around so he could face his interviewer. He ran a long, slender hand through his fine brown hair, fixed his magnetic eyes on a point in the wall just below the ceiling and continued in his soft, slightly accented voice:

"I don't believe 'free love,' in its vulgar sense, should be accepted, but I do believe in the right of every man and every woman to find his or her mate and to free himself or herself of any alliance that proves to be other than the mating of soul units.

"It's a crime to let our universities teach young men and women modern ideas of life and independent research lecturers to spout to classes of free men and women when the first sign of a disposition to be free by man or woman is hailed with screams of public denunciation, while our archaic courts sentence the so-called offenders to fine or imprisonment. Perhaps I'm a little in advance of my time, but not much."

With the frankness which astonished the trustees of the Kenosha church when they confronted him with charges of conjugal duplicity and demanded his resignation, the marrying parson related his marital adventures and indicated which of the three "wives" he will take as his life companion if the Federal and the Wisconsin and Illinois authorities permit him to go his way.

Now, take my first love affair," he began. "I shall never forget it. I believe the girl was fourteen and I was sixteen. We had both been to some sort of problem play in which the trial marriage idea was first displayed on the stage. I even forget the name of the production, but it impressed the girl and it impressed me. We got to planning a trial marriage of our own, but somebody learned of our plans and we were separated.

"I am glad of it, because when I look back I recall that she used cosmetics and rice powder, like a chorus girl, and she was only fourteen years old. Our tryout would have been brief. I can't stand a woman who paints her face.

"Now, there was Ethel Spurgeon. That girl really should thank me for her freedom. She could not have been happy with me. We had a good many things in common, but in certain ways were antagonistic. It didn't take me long to find that out. I am sure that it did not take her any longer. When we parted there were the usual tears. On occasions like that one side of one's nature weeps and the other side rejoices.

"There is no reason why Ethel should not marry the best man in the world. She is one of the best women.

"Take the affair with Doris. Now, although you would scarcely believe it, Doris, although she is only seventeen, can cook. She's

"THE SCARLET LETTER"

Interesting Parallels Between the Case of Rev. Mr. Darnell of Real Life and the Rev. Arthur Dimmesdale of Fiction

Little Doris Vaughn, the Fifteen-Year-Old Chicago Girl Whom the Rev. Mr. Darnell Married, and Who Arrived at Her Husband's Parsonage Only to Find It Occupied by Another "Wife" and Her Child.

"THE SCARLET LETTER," Nathaniel Hawthorne's recognized masterpiece and accepted everywhere as one of the score or so of the great masterpieces of English literature, purports to have been drawn from the contents of a musty record in the archives of the Custom House at Salem, Massachusetts, where Hawthorne served for three years as Collector of that port. It is a grim tale of social and religious life in Massachusetts early in the Colonial period. Hawthorne's "Scarlet Letter" is, in many ways, a remarkable parallel to the career of Rev. Mr. Darnell

The heroine is Hester Prynne, a comely young woman, who, convicted of the sin of having borne a child out of wedlock, bears the punishment of wearing a scarlet letter "A" upon the bosom of her gown. At stated intervals, thus stigmatized, she is compelled to stand for an hour or more upon the pillory in the public square and submit to the taunts of the rude community. Though repeatedly pressed to do so, she steadily refuses to name the partner in her sin

The beloved leader of that austere community is its pastor, young Arthur Dimmesdale. He is cultured, of ascetic habits and appearance, possessed of wonderful eloquence and religious zeal, and, with the firmness of one in authority, unites a gentleness that appeals to all

As Hester Prynne stood upon the pillory, her fatherless babe in her arms, the shameful scarlet letter on her bosom, it was the duty of the young minister, Arthur Dimmesdale, to urge her to make her penitence complete by naming the child's father. With his hand upon his heart, his ascetic face pale and his lips trembling, Mr. Dimmesdale performs this duty in an early chapter of the book

"Speak, woman!" said another voice, coldly and sternly, proceeding from the crowd about the scaffold. "Speak, and give your child a father!"

"I will not speak," answered Hester, turning pale as death, but responding to this voice, which she too surely recognized. "And my child must seek a Heavenly Father; she shall never know an earthly one!"

The cold, stern voice in the crowd about the scaffold came from an elderly, gray bearded, misshapen stranger, who had been guided to the spot by an Indian. This man is Roger Chillingworth, a doctor skilled in the lore of herbs and the lore of darker things. He is implacable in his desire for vengeance, for he is the aged and deformed husband from whom young and comely Hester had fled in England, hiding herself in this new world colony

Presently Hester learns with anguish in her heart that she is not considered a proper guardian for her child, and that the law may take little Pearl away from her

Taking the child with her, she visits Governor Bellingham to plead for her mother's rights. The Governor summons two reverend laymen and the doctor, Roger Chillingworth, to get their opinions. The latter and the elder clergyman are against the mother. Beside herself, Hester turns to Mr. Dimmesdale

At the direct appeal the Rev. Arthur Dimmesdale, who has grown paler and more emaciated since the night at the scaffold, comes forward with his hand over his heart and speaks eloquently in support of Hester's claims, ending:

"For Hester Prynne's sake, then, and her child's—for the poor child's sake, let us leave them as Providence hath seen fit to place them!"

"You speak, my friend, with a strange earnestness," said old Roger Chillingworth, fixing his eyes on him

Hester's counsel won—and from that moment Roger Chillingworth makes the young minister the object of his sinister attentions. He can disguise his purpose, for all the community is alarmed about the state of its beloved young leader's health. Instinctively, Mr. Dimmesdale avoids the misshapen doctor, but cannot be rid of him.

Roger Chillingworth, coming upon the young minister when he has fallen asleep in his study chair, discovers fastened over his heart beneath his garments a most amazing symbol, which justifies all his suspicions. He discovers also that Mr. Dimmesdale has provided himself with a scourge with which he cruelly lacerates his flesh

At night, when all the community is asleep, Mr. Dimmesdale, tortured by remorse, goes and stands on the scaffold where Hester Prynne publicly displayed herself at noonday.

"The next day he preached a discourse which was held to be the richest and most powerful and the most replete with heavenly influences that had ever proceeded from his lips. Souls, it is said, more souls than one, were brought to the truth by the efficacy of that sermon, and vowed within themselves to cherish a holy gratitude toward Mr. Dimmesdale throughout the long hereafter."

Mr. Dimmesdale's health declines rapidly. He does not discover the relationship between Hester and Roger Chillingworth, but comes to realize the sinister motives of the latter toward him

After delivering his powerful Election sermon, the minister, worn to a shadow of his former self, already a dying man, calls Hester and little Pearl to him, and together they ascend the scaffold, which is surrounded by the villagers and the first dignitaries of the community. They regard the scene in dumb amazement.

From that same scaffold Mr. Dimmesdale makes public confession. Those are his dying words. In delivering them he bares his breast, saying: "Stand any here that question God's judgment on a sinner? Behold! Behold a dreadful witness of it!"

Those who stood near declared that they saw blazoned on the bare flesh of the minister's breast the same terrible symbol borne upon her bosom by Hester Prynne

"The finest girl of all the girls I have ever tried to strike a permanent contract with is Ruth Soper. She will be my life partner for the rest of our two lives, if she so selects. Because I expect to ask married to Ruth, because she is the mother of my child. I suppose it is said that I have treated her badly, even criminally speaking, perhaps I have, but she understands. What was the use of trying to explain an arrangement to people in a Minnesota village?

"I had to insist on the conventions. If it had not been for her difficult position there not a word would have been said by me when I had to leave Kenosha and she had to go back, with her baby, to her relatives in Owatonna. She understands. We were educated in the same schools. We attended the same lectures. We have much the same trend of thought. Oh, yes, I know "I'm glad it's Ruth who has the baby. I am very fond of her. She has intellect, insight, practical common sense, the maternal instinct, beauty, grace, tact, kindliness. And she has all the others backed out of sight as a practical, competent housekeeper.

"I know that she is the one woman of all I have met with whom I am content to spend the rest of my life. I know all these things about her because I have tried marriage with her.

"Were it not for the trial marriages, which I have had in defiance of conventions, I probably would be living an unhappy, though legal, married life with Ethel Spurgeon or another of the women I weighed and found wanting. I would have avoided the perfect happiness I look forward to as the husband of Ruth Soper.

One and one-half cups flour, 1 tablespoonful sugar, 3 teaspoonfuls baking powder, ½ teaspoonful salt, 1 egg, 1 cup milk, 1 teaspoonful butter, 1 cup milk.

Sift and mix the dry things. Add the wet. Beat thoroughly for five minutes. Put them into the stove.

CHOCOLATE CAKE.

Two tablespoonfuls butter, 1 cup sugar, 1 egg, ½ cup milk, 1 ½ cups flour, 3 teaspoonfuls baking powder, 2 tablespoonfuls breakfast cocoa, 1 teaspoonful essence of vanilla.

Pour the cocoa into the milk and stir until they are well blended. They should be stirred until entirely smooth, with no bits of cocoa on them. Add the melted butter. Then the sugar. Then the baking powder and flour. Beat until smooth and add the vanilla. Bake fifteen minutes.

When this cake is done either roast or cocoanut icing.

COCOANUT ICING.

White of 1 egg, ½ cup water 1 cup sugar, 1 box of cocoanut.

Boil the sugar and water until the liquid strings. That is, when stirring it with a fork, and you hold up the fork, the liquid drops from it in strings. Let it boil to this and not one bubble more. Make sure. Drop the liquid white about to drop, or at least four times from a cup held in the left hand while beating vigorously with the fork held in the right.

SCALLOPED POTATOES.

Grease a pan with butter. Choose the potatoes that are big or flat shapes you would not want to use mean for boiling or baking. Cut them in thin slices. Spread them in the pan in layers an inch thick. Sprinkle with pepper and salt to taste. Dot with butter here and there, perhaps a half teaspoonful for each layer. Four or six bits of butter should be sprinkled over each layer. Repeat the layers of the raw potatoes until the pan is full. Cover them with milk. Place in the oven and cook for one hour

SUNDAY AMERICAN EXAMINER PATTERNS

POPULAR fashions in skirts box plaits, tucks, gathers, flounces, double and triple rows; but most in evidence are the pockets.

Shirtwaists, too, show this comfortable auxiliary. Speaking of shirtwaists, there surely was never a smarter, more practical style than that of the convertible front, which permits one to roll up her collar in true "choker" style, or to turn it down in cool, comfortable fashion. While long sleeves bespeak the latest mode one cannot deny that there is a lasting affection for short sleeves on warm weather waists.

Such pretty patterns of lawn, chollies, crepes and silks as one sees in the stores! But the thing for kimonos, negligees and other "comfort" garments—and what styles are more easy to make, or daintier or more pleasing.

No. 1314.
A Comfortable Play Garment.

The garment may be finished with a rolled collar, or with facings, and with sleeves in wrist or short-length. The leg portions may be gathered or finished with straight lower edge.

The pattern is cut in 4 sizes, 4, 6 and 8 years. It requires 2¼ yards of 36-inch material for a 4 year size.

No. 1309.
A Dainty "Lingerie" Combination.

It will be found delightfully cool and very becoming. The corset cover is a one-piece model, with gathered fulness at the neck edge that may be drawn up by a casing covered with a band of dainty embroidery, or with embroidered eyelets, or beading.

The cap, in popular Tipperary style may be of net, lace, beaded chiffon or mull or of the same material as that selected for the sack.

The pattern comprises all styles illustrated and is cut in 3 sizes, small, medium and large. It requires 1 yard of 27-inch material for the corset cover, ¼ yard for the cap and 2⅝ yards for the sack for a medium size.

No. 1323.
"Junior" Dress with Under Waist.

This charmingly pretty model is lovely for soft, summer materials. It may be finished with the skirt in raised or normal waistline, the waist may be cut low, or finished with a shaped flare collar, and there are two sleeves, one long and close fitting, the other in the new short puff style.

It is cut in three sizes: 12, 14 and 16 years. A 16-year size will require 2¼ yards of 27 inch material for the guimpe or under waist, and 4⅛ yards of 44-inch material for the dress.

The New Collarless Wraps And the New Collars.

How the Gorgeous Robes of Ancient Ritual Have Been Adapted to the Cloaks and Capes of the Fashions of To-day

LADY DUFF-GORDON, the famous "Lucile" of London, and foremost creator of fashions in the world, writes each week the fashion article for this newspaper, presenting all that is newest and best in styles for well-dressed women.

By Lady Duff-Gordon.

QUITE naturally if we go back to Victorian fashions in dresses we must go back to Victorian fashions for coverings of the dresses. The distinguishing mark of Victorian styles was fulness. A woman had a lot to cover her. The fashions of the moment are also full fashions—at least so far as the skirts are concerned. The wraps, therefore which are to cover the fulnesses must be large and loose.

But besides the Victorian inspiration there are in many of my wraps adaptations from the churches. As I have often remarked in these articles, beauty is universal. It has no right to be confined to any one thing and the class should have the monopoly of it. Beauty is not a rigid thing that must dwell only in one place. It is like the wind or the water, that go where they listeth.

It is the same way with ideas. An idea which is a real idea can be taken from any place and be made to give full value in any other place. Therefore it is that the stiff cope which is so solemn on the shoulders of its wearer during ritual becomes only charming on the shoulders of a woman—as you can see by looking at the large picture at the right of this page. This wrap fits only around the shoulders. Actually there is no collar at all. The modified pelerine breaks the stiffness. There are no sleeves. The arms simply come out of two holes on the side. This wrap itself is of shot taffeta, striped after the ordinary bed ticking design. Little knots of flowers fall from its points and give the necessary touch of lightness to its somewhat hierarchical lines.

In the figure in the left hand corner the religious suggestion is a little more emphasized in the facing and ends of the sleeves, and also in the flowing fulnesses of the wrap itself. This wrap is distinctly not collarless, but it has the new collar shape. This collar rises almost to the ears, but it fits only four inches from the neck.

And this is a feature of all the new collars. A few of the tailored suits have their collars close fitting like men's, but even these do not begin to fit, as I have said, with a point at the four inches from the neck is reached. The collars may be as high as you like. Some of my wraps have them as high as the eyes. They cover quite half the back of the head.

But to return to the wrap. It is of striped damask while the brocaded rose pattern ribbon is used for the sleeves ends and ends. The ribbon hangs from the wrist with quite a churchly effect—so that has only the faintest hint of the ecclesiastical. Its fragrance is pelerine with the charming little bow just between the shoulder blades. It is of blue shot messaline.

I hope you will note how charmingly the hat, so curious in itself, harmonizes with the first wrap. In this whole costume we really have a study in line and its harmonies. The cut of the wrap and the gatherings of its ribbon and armhole facings are irregular. A perfectly stiff plain hat would only accentuate these irregularities, perhaps to the pitch of disharmony. But the hat, with its extraordinary irregularities and its puffed-out plume, modifies the wrap—just as the wrap itself modifies the hat. The consequence is a pleasing harmony, in which all stiffness and grotesqueness disappear. The hat is really what might be called a harmonizer. By intensifying the quality of line it resolves both wrap and hat into one harmonious whole.

And just as a plain hat with this wrap would take away from the beauty of the wrap itself, so would a plain wrap with this hat intensify the irregularity of the hat and make it at least partly grotesque.

I mention this once more to drive home the lesson that a woman's costume must be considered not in part, but wholly—I mean that dress, wrap, hat, stockings, shoes, gloves and all the rest of it must in each case be a unit. Even Joseph's coat of many colors could have been made harmonious with a little attention to detail.

Victorian Dolman of Blue Shot Messaline. Notice the Old-Fashioned Pelerine That Is a Feature of the Newest Wraps.

The Newest Cope Wrap, Which Finds Its Inspiration in the Vestments of a Greek Priest. It Is of Shot Taffeta, Striped After Ordinary Bed Ticking Design. The Arms Come Through Two Holes Cut Out as a Dolman. The Whole Cloak Loose and Fitting Only Around the Shoulders.

Extra!!! Women's Styles Seasonable in 1940 -- By LEWIS ALLEN

I KNOW you won't believe this at the beginning, but kindly read it right through to the bitter end. There's logic in it. I can't convince you of its truth in one simple, pointed, pertinent paragraph, but I can convince you if you will not throw this aside and mutter "Fake," but read it through, that in the year 1940 women's styles will be seasonable.

I mean by that they will wear Summer clothes in Summer, Winter clothes in Winter, and other clothes in their proper season.

This deduction is by pure logic. I do not pretend to be a prophet. I cannot tell whether in 1940 they will wear knickerbockers, whether they will wear skirts to their knees or [illegible] on the ground.

They may be wearing seven veils or only a string of coral beads. There's no telling—but whatever they do wear in 1940 will be seasonable. Listen!

Away back in 1880 Mrs. James A. Garfield wore Summer hats in the Summer and furs in Winter.

In 1890 the women added bright flowers to their hats at Easter although it was cold and snowy. How the papers did rave at them.

In 1900 the women wore straw hats at Easter, but [illegible] Some even went so far as to discard their thick gloves and appear in silk mitts.

In 1910 they began to put on their straw hats in early March.

This year the dear creatures appeared with straw hats in January. If a woman dared wear a Winter hat as late as February she was [illegible] the same time her husband does.

The Care of Babies

By BENEDICT KIDDER

[illegible] Star Company. Great Britain Rights Reserved.

THE [illegible] us far we have referred to the baby as "he" or "him." Of course, not all babies are boys. If you prefer, it's just as easy to have a girl as a boy. All you have to do is to get your rich uncle to promise to leave all his money to your first son, on the understanding that you will name the boy after him. You will then have nothing but daughters. If you would rather have a boy make the same kind of an agreement with your rich aunt AMUSING THE BABY—Babies must be amused constantly to keep them in good humor. Few of them are intelligent enough to get much amusement out of baseball or poker, so some simpler entertainment must be found for them. They are passionately fond of rattles, and it is a simple matter to gratify them by getting a flock of rattlesnakes and letting them wander around the apartment. This will also make life interesting for the mother.

Another easy way of furnishing rattles is to invite your friends up to shoot a game of craps. The rattle of the dice will keep the baby chortling with delight, and the pleasant click will likewise make you laugh heartily as you see your friends tucking your rent money away in their jeans.

Rattles appeal to babies of both sexes, but girl babies are even fonder of dolls. If yours is a girl baby go into the cabaret joints along Broadway and gather up a bunch of baby dolls and take them home. The best time to do this is when your wife is visiting her mother, for women are so apt to misunderstand a man's motives.

DETERMINING THE SEX.—[illegible] its fair [illegible] papers, but they [illegible] up an awful lot of it, just the same.

TALKING TO THE BABY.—It is a strange fact unexplained by science, that of the millions of babies born in this country every year of American parents, practically none speak English. If they did it would be much easier to talk with them. As it is, unfortunate misunderstandings constantly arise. For example the baby will tell you in perfectly clear baby talk that he wants his bottle, and, like as not, you'll tell him in equally clear English that he doesn't cut out that blankety-blank racket you'll break his blankety-blank head.

This is highly regrettable, but it has one good feature. It gives the baby a chance, very early in life, to learn some words that will be very useful later on, when he has occasion to express his opinion of his wife's relations, or of the man who invited him out to dinner and then had to go to the telephone when the waiter brought the check.

Mr. Dooley on War Relief

By F. P. Dunne

A few of the many funny things Dooley has to say in the May Number of HEARST'S MAGAZINE.

Published by permission of HEARST'S MAGAZINE.

"YES," said Mr. Dooley, "we are th' most gin'rous people in th' wurruld. I say it without fear of conthradiction fr'm anny American. We're the most gin'rous, big hearted, open-handed, [illegible] [illegible] annything we've got in th' house in ye'ers nation that was iver known. I tell ye, Hinnissy, th' way our people, an' especially th' beautiful ladies in America has antied up f'r th' suffrers fr'm th' war in Europe, makes me proud. I see a fellow in th' bread line in Halsted [illegible] reading in th' paper about fifty million dollars I'm sint to th' people iv Galisya, mind ye, an' ye cud see at a glance that it made his busom heave with pride an' brought a new light into his life. In a throneport iv enthusiasm, as Hogan wud say, he danced on th' pasper an' thin laughed until he coughed.

"An' it ain't those amongst us that has thirtives in th' disthressed countries who admit th' fact, that are doin' th' most, but th' proudest numbers iv our ancient arrystocracy, whose fair faces has smiled on me fr'm th' papers iver since th' boom in pig iron in eighteen hundhred an' ninety-eight. Whinver I want to find out what is goin' on in th' fash'nable wurruld I buy a pas'per that is published in th' Intherests iv wurrukin' the wurrukin'classes, an' here I read, 'Society ladies do th' fox-throt f'r th' starvin' people in Munich.—Pitcher iv Cecil van Steenevant iv Mitchigan a'noo in a box at th' opry sewin' penwipers f'r poor, long-suffrin' Montenegro.'

"I see," said Mr. Hennessy.

"An' so on. It gives ye a new idee iv these pampered childher iv fortune that ye thought so cold, whin they bumped ye with their autymobill. Many iv thim an're not even satisfied to stop at home an' give up their evenings to th' grindin' torture iv th' wan step an' th' dip f'r th' benifit iv th' an'mies in the field. There are hundhreds iv them in Paris at this minyit who an're on'y waitin' f'r commissions as gin'rals to go to th' front, an' Gin'ral Joffre reports that his retthreat was interrupted be encountherin' dense masses iv American observers. A dock who has ust returned fr'm th' front says they do wonderfully well as nurses, all things considered. 'There have been a few instances where hot mince pie was administered in sujpoid cases an' maybe wanst or twicet wheer th' kerosene has been mistook fr th' castherile,' he says. 'But considherin' th' number iv patients there are rilitively few cases where death can achooly be thraced to th' nurshin',' he says. 'Besides,' he says, 'there's usually a thrained nurse near by with stomach pump,' he says.

"It's a very fine thing to see these hoochoos American crushers donnin' their simple but attharctive hospital uniforms, an' hurryin' fr'm th' photygrafters to slowe aside th' pro-fissyonals an' tinderly admipisther th' prescription f'r th' man in the next bed to a young officer that they'd niver seen before outside iv 'Th' Pris'ner iv Zinda.'

"No wonder sojers who appeared too much hurted to move now leap from their beds an' hop cheerfully back to th' frin' line after their hair has been combed wanst be th' deft fingers iv these angels.

"It's what ye indind to do, not what ye do, that ought to count in this wurruld, aven if it don't.

"An' anyhow if I had a spear iv hair I'd rather have it tugged be a fair lady this smoothed by a German barber.

"Tu' pa aper said th' other day there were four hundhred thousan onemployed in New York. There is no nicissity f'r anny able-bodied man or woman to be out iv imployment. These people shud go into relief wurruk. There's plinty f'r all. F'r th' first time in me life th' leither carryer has begun to have a feelin' iv respect f'r me as a man iv importance. Ivry hour he staggers up with a load iv billydoos fr'm th' most ex plusive people in our land askin' me to jine a comity that is sindin' us ful articles to th' sorrowin' multichoods or th' gallant sojers iv those barbarous but pitcheresque counthries acrost th' sea. I always jine. 'Tis asier thin a-vin'. Long ago I larned that whin me heart ached f'r others th' only way I cud sathrate me ilf f'm floatin'. I roon was to jine a charity organization. In that way I cud schrangle me kindly impulses, f'r it takes a ragged man to extract honey fr'm himself.

"I'm nothral in me charities as in me pollyticks. I don't give anything to anybody.

"But I'm on a comity to buy new bells f'r a church in Antwerp, an' to provide puttees f'r Lord Rochener. I'm on th' advisory boorn f'r a s'ciety iv young ladies that ar-re knittin' silk neckties f'r th' tireless Roo-shyans. I'm a mimber iv an organ-ization that keeps Gin'ral von Hindenburg supplied with fresh lilies iv th'-alley ivry mornin', an' another that has agreed to pro vide a package iv peppermint an' two ounces iv canary bur-ed seed to ivery English cavalryman who has got th' Victorya Cross or comes fr'm a county family. I'm busy ivry afthernoon fr'm three to four at th' headquarters iv th' American Turkish Relief Comity that's supplyin' cigaret-holders an' dance music to th' dislocated harems iv Turkey. I'm threasurer iv a comity that's providin' hammocks an' popcorn to th' German Gin'ral Staff, an' sicrety iv wan that is sindin' wrist watches to the luthrepid Servyans. I'm givin' a concert on a concertina this afthernoon f'r th' comity that is shippin' goloshes, or goolashes, I can't make out which to th' Hungaryan army. An' whin ye came in I was just answerin' a letter fr'm an American lady, timprarily, but she hopes permanently, in England, who has turned her beautiful mansyon into a hospital f'r disabled jooks, oblick mathrimony.

"Thanks to our thinivolence, ivry ship that sails to th' homes iv our dear frinds acrost th' seas an' ain't aycther sunked or torpedoed be them, carries toys to Nuremberg, jam to England, sausage to Breslau, California champagne to Paris. Before th' year is out these savage thribes will have an ample supply iv bilyard cues, feather dusters, curtain rods, bookmarks, doilies, curlin' irons, hair dye, stove polish, Christmas calendars, bank statements, finger bowls, an' tunin' forks."

Sticking to It.

WHEN the Germans finally entered Belgium a native of Liege made himself obnoxious to one troop by his constant loud talk about the brave defence. Finally the commander summoned him.

"Now you've boasted about enough," he said. "We can't listen to you any longer. I am going to give you your choice: you will be shot, or you will swear allegiance to the German Emperor."

Considerably subdued, the offender pondered. "Well," he decided, "I don't want to die, so I guess I'll swear allegiance."

And he took the oath.

"All right," said the commander, "now you are one of us. You can come and go as you like."

The man walked toward the door and was passing out when suddenly he turned. "Say," he exclaimed, "didn't those Belgians give us an awful fight!"

His Occupation.

"JOHN JONES, the patient who came in a little while ago," said the attendant in the out-department, "didn't give his occupation."

"What was the nature of his trouble?" asked the resident physician.

"Put him down as book agent."

Function of the Stomach.

THE teacher was examining the class in physiology.

"Mary, can you tell us," she asked, "what is the function of the stomach?"

Hungry.

"WELL, my man," said a hospital physician to a patient who had been on low diet for a long time, "how are you?"

"Much better, sir."

"Could you eat a small chicken today?"

"That I could, sir."

"What would you like it stuffed with?"

"Please, your honor," replied the hungry patient, "I would like it stuffed with another."

The Climax.

MR. JONES was operated on for appendicitis. He was placed in a small ward to recover from the anaesthetic, his bed being between that of two patients previously operated on. As he awoke from the anaesthetic, he said: "Thank heaven, that's over!"

"Oh, no," said the patient on his right, "when I was operated on the doctor left a sponge and had to go back and get it out."

"Yes, indeed," said the patient on the left, "and when I was operated on the doctor left the scissors and had to go back to get them."

Just then the surgeon put his head in the door and asked: "Has any one here seen my hat?" and Jones fainted.

Satisfactorily Arranged.

"I BELIEVE," said the young physician, "that bad cooks supply us with half our patients."

Artist Moynahan's impressions of the antics at the City Club Mock Trial.

WHEN the Boston City Club starts out to do anything it doesn't believe in half-way measures—as to wit, its magnificent club house—wherefore when it was decided to put the chairman of the building committee and the architect on trial for graft in the construction of the building, the brains and beauty of the bench and bar were secured. They appeared at the mock trial at the club house the other evening.

"Justice Must Prevail," was the court's motto.

The defendants were one "JIM" ROLLINS, Chairman of the Building Committee, and one "LOUIE" NEWHALL, Architect, charged with GRAFT in the construction of the new Club House.

Judge presiding was Hon. ROBERT O. HARRIS; Clerk of Court, GUY H. HOLLIDAY, Esq.; Court Stenographer, HORACE A. EDGECOMB, Esq.

Counsel for the prosecution—Hon. James M. Swift, Hon. Channing Cox, Hon. Louis A. Frothingham, Hon. Daniel J. Kiley, John B. Dore, Esq.

Counsel for the defence—Guy Ham, Esq., Solomon Lewenberg, Esq., Hon George L. Barnes.

The Sheriff was SAMUEL F. HUBBARD; Chief of Police—Edward G. Graves.

The two defendants arrived in the custody of the sheriff. Court was opened by the Sheriff with the following proclamation:

"Hear ye, hear ye, hear ye All persons having anything to do before this honorable and Inferior Court of the City Club at its first and only session sitting within and for the City of Boston, draw near, give your attention and ye shall hear. (Pathetically) God save the Commonwealth of Massachusetts

The Court—Mr. Sheriff, keep order. Mr. Clerk, you may call the trial list and see what is ready for trial

The Clerk—McCall v. Cushing.

Mr. Cox—If Your Honor please, I move that this case be continued to the Fall term. I have good and sufficient reason

In the first place I have just been brought into this case as attorney for the people, and I have not received any fee

Now, it is uncertain just at present who is going to win in this case, and it is necessary for certain eminent men in this community to take sides, and it is going to be mighty embarrassing if they have to take sides before they know who is going to win.

I know that it is your desire that we have justice in these cases, that we have some regularity and of the proceedings. This is no time to go through the [illegible] because the public mind is not sufficiently inflamed. At present the front page is given over to the story of Dr Jekyll and Mr. Hyde, which is coming out in daily installments from Syracuse. And then right after that I know the headlines will be given over to the attempts by ex-Mayor Fitzgerald to prevent the recall of Mayor Curley. And there is nothing in it for us at this time in the way of notoriety if we proceed.

The Court—This case, after standing all Winter, and after the making of various moves and counter moves, is now reached for trial. On looking over the papers, however, it seems to me that they are not complete, and after hearing counsel I am satisfied that the parties do not yet know what their issues are or where they are at. I therefore order the case to stand with the further order that the parties make up their issues and complete their pleadings and get ready for trial on September 21

The Clerk—The next case in order is Barnes v. Roosevelt.

Mr. Barnes—I would [illegible] put over until the September trial. The reasons are obvious. [illegible] not to be expected that a [illegible] can get justice in this [illegible] present time. Mr. [illegible] prosecuted, inoffensive [illegible]

There is an old poem that says: "BACKWARD, TURN BACKWARD, OH, TIME IN THY FLIGHT."

Perhaps it is not out of place to remind some of the candidates in the race for the American's twenty-five DE LUXE tours to the California fairs and return, that they should see to it that they are not giving voice to some such expression as this after July 3d, when the contest comes to a close.

Time is a vanishing affair; you always seem to have plenty of it, but, before you know it, it's gone. There's no place for a "tomorrow" policy in this twentieth century, and no place for it in this contest.

TODAY is the time for action—and today is May 16—there remains only forty-eight days to the end of the vote-getting and only nine to the end of Series "D." Every day should be a day of action, of accomplishment, of increased vote totals.

The big 10-vote coupon will be found on Page 2 of the "Main News Section" of this paper—the first 10-vote coupon in Series "D" and a mighty important stepping stone to success in this contest.

The first vote standing of all candidates will be printed two weeks from today in the Sunday American, May 30th.

You will see on this page the photographs of some of the candidates in the race—every one of them enthusiastic and in the race to win if they can.

On this page, too, we print a picture of a scene within the marvelous exposition grounds at California. When the American tourists visit this spot, ex will be enjoying the LAP DE LUXE which will be the last word in comfort, convenience and pleasure.

Tomorrow is the last day for sending in Series "D" coupons, and they must all be in the hands of the Contest Manager not later than 6 o'clock p. m. today, in the mail sacks with a postmark before that hour.

The contest is more than half over and is NOW ON THE LAST LAP—forty-eight days more, two pay-days, and a Sunday will have passed for those who have failed to make every precious day a vote-producing day.

How Physical Training Aids Morality

The Close Relationship Between Strong, Healthy Bodies and Strong, Healthy Souls Explained by Many Well-Known American Men and Women

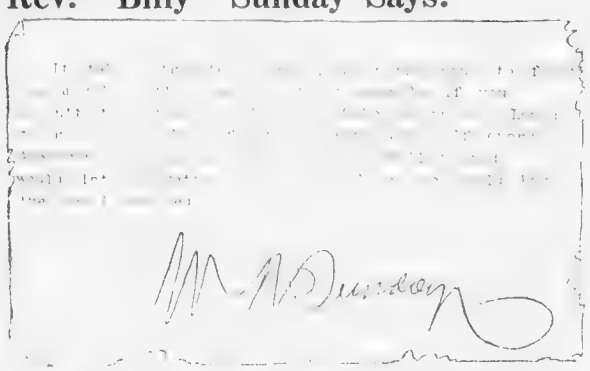
Prof. Sargent of Harvard University Has Examined Willard and Says:

"I have examined and made measurements of Jess Willard and he is a wonderful man. He is a perfect specimen of physical manhood and his proportions are all in perfect harmony and symmetry. His weight is very evenly distributed and he ought to hold his title for several years.

"His long stringy muscles denote great endurance and it is no surprising feature of his make-up to see that none of them are bunched.

"Willard shows a striking evidence of clean living. A man cannot drink liquor and dissipate and keep himself in such condition."

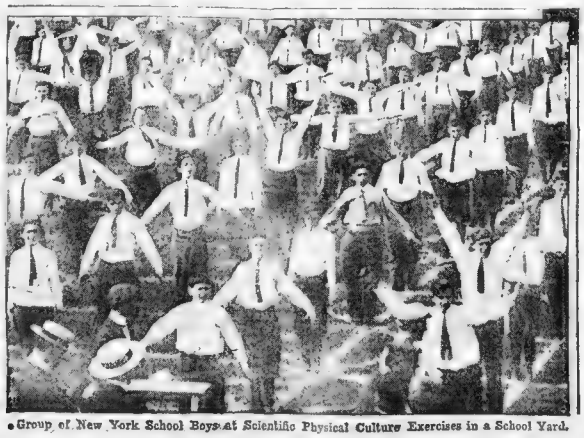
Rev. "Billy" Sunday Says:



Dr. Luther H. Gulick Says:

President Camp Fire Girls and Former Director of Physical Training of New York Public Schools

I [illegible] in the way to start [illegible] for who can [illegible] the fair [illegible] Many [illegible] of the great institutions [illegible] to be as well [illegible] as [illegible] mind but how about the [illegible] of boys who never go to high school, who [illegible] and hence who are [illegible] of their natural [illegible] problem [illegible] our equal opportunity [illegible] Jess [illegible] problem [illegible] days when [illegible] and physical education [illegible] boys on [illegible] with doing [illegible] the [illegible] opportunity [illegible] which [illegible] and our country districts just as [illegible] will enable the average [illegible] girl, too, to build up true stamina [illegible] Jess [illegible] the one need. I mean, of [illegible] Courage in competition with [illegible] and physical virtues, so that [illegible] boys and [illegible] will become [illegible] It is easy to get people [illegible] for a day or a week or a year. [illegible] nothing that will establish [illegible] principle of splendid living which shall [illegible] degenerating tendencies of [illegible] Athletic [illegible] certainly [illegible]



Group of New York School Boys at Scientific Physical Culture Exercises in a School Yard.

Colonel Roosevelt Says:

I DON'T care very much for professional sport of any kind, but I thoroughly believe in boxing, exactly as I believe in football and other rough manly games; and I think it is the greatest misfortune that decent people should ever allow the hard hitting game to [illegible] that a prize fighter is a man to be monopolized by the men who don't believe in decency.

You have heard of the preacher who on being criticised for choosing [illegible] that had a swing to them, said he did [illegible] like in allowing the devil to have [illegible] good music, and I don't believe that professionals should have a monopoly of [illegible] things which make a man succeed in [illegible] and fumble.

I wish to say that I have the [illegible] sympathy with any form of rough [illegible] athletic sport carried on purely for sport's sake, from boxing to football and [illegible] The New York club made a mistake [illegible] stopping contests when they became brutal or when it was manifest to all that one of the contestants had no possible chance of winning.

The fight between Jeffries and Sharkey should have been stopped before the end of the twenty-fifth round. It became brutal after the twenty-third, and, as Sharkey had no chance, it should have been stopped. When I was at the head of the New York Police Department I witnessed the Maher-Choynski fight. That was a hard fight, but it was so evenly contested that I could not stop it. I did, however, stop one of the preliminary bouts—not because it became brutal, but because one of the contestants was covered with blood and it looked bad.

At one time I boxed a great deal with [illegible] Dunn, and had a professional wrestler [illegible] Dwyer—I think that was his name—called on me several times a week, and I usually made it warm for him. He left always after working with me several mornings, but sent a substitute—a big, husky fellow, but I knew more about wrestling than he did, so I let him go. I am getting too old for that sort of sport, but still like it—especially boxing.

Dr. Belle J. Macdonald Says:

Former Inspector for the Board of Health of New York City and Chairman of the Public Health Education Committee of the American Medical Association.

I AM glad to know that a series of articles on health and physical culture is to be published by this newspaper.

As a mother, a [illegible] and a [illegible] I welcome a proper presentation of [illegible] rules and [illegible] given as [illegible] Willard. Mothers may deteriorate physically as [illegible] but no intelligent mother will, for that reason, ignore the knowledge of the new champion can communicate on the building of strength to their sons.

Jess Willard is of a [illegible] interest than the ordinary [illegible] because it is a well known fact that his life has been as clean as a babe's. It is part of the [illegible] new tide of feminine [illegible] this should be welcomed as [illegible] to a new era in society.

It is a plea for [illegible] man, the man who shall be of life as unimpeachable as that of the [illegible] That such a man is presumably the strongest and hardest man in this country was [illegible] That a man who has no vices should have acquired one of admitted excellence [illegible] own lesson.

For this reason, if no other, the women who are mothers will wish their sons to read articles written by Jess Willard on how to keep yourself well and strong.

As an inspector for the Board of Health of New York City I visited many homes and examined the children in many households. [illegible] I found in these homes was [illegible] air and exercise. If Jess Willard will show how he achieved each of these, that alone will make the series invaluable.

"In our examination of so many children what did you find was the weakest point?" I was recently asked in regard to these defects which hinder and their poor little victims. I have replied: "It isn't especially [illegible] particularly the lungs, nor the brain that have suffered through improper living. It is the general physical condition that is impaired. Whatever sends the [illegible] condition below par impairs the functions of the vital organs."

Therefore, whether Mr. Willard goes into scientific discussion or simply reiterates the need of pure air, plenty of sleep, plain and nourishing food, right thinking and clean living, he will have performed an invaluable service in giving to the world his ideas on how to [illegible] a man strong and keep him well.

Several of our recent presidents of the United States have furnished an inspiring example of the [illegible] of clean life and high ideals. They have shown the results in mind [illegible] character and public progress of such habits of life. Comes Jess Willard with the [illegible] on of what irreproachable habits will do for the general physical quality. As a [illegible] ary of health we will welcome him.

Gustavus T. Kirby Says:

Former President of the American Amateur Athletic Union.

TEMPERANCE is the big thing. There is as much danger in over-doing anything as in not doing enough. Play every day and work every day, but play when you play and work when you work. Train every day, and always be in fine condition. It is very easy when you get in the habit, and life to you will be happier when you look at it through the clear eyes of good health than when you are going through dissipation or overdoing [illegible] business.

Be everlastingly on your toes. Be able to swim against the stream and not merely float along with the current, and never you will be a real man, a leader [illegible] not merely an "also ran" or a "[illegible]."

Walk instead of ride. [illegible] fresh air and sunshine. [illegible] couple of times each week. Play what you can, basketball, track and field sports, gymnastics, boxing, but don't do more than your physical strength will enable you to do well. Then you see a real champion who is [illegible] and [illegible] such a one [illegible] around like a turkey cock, saying "[illegible] all the life, it won't hurt you!" [illegible] a few years, it won't be long [illegible] game. John Barleycorn [illegible] more champions than John L. [illegible] or Jess Willard ever did or will. Carping critics have said that rowing injured one, that football is too dangerous, that running is bad for the heart, that in baseball a wild pitcher may slay you low, but when experts analyze these charges they are found fallacious. The athletes who are [illegible] who die young are those who were [illegible] trained for the contest, or who, after [illegible] dissipated and forgot to care for their bodies. The researches of Dr. Mosher, Dr. Sargent, Dr. McKenzie and others, show conclusively that sports of the character referred to are beneficial and that in after life they help you toward success and happiness.

Rev. Dr. Park

I BELIEVE in athlete exhibitions, in contests where two are evenly matched together in a trial of skill and strength; in a contest where blows are given and taken, but not where the exhibition is a brutal, a disgusting spectacle—where blood is shed and bodies are maimed.

I believe in a trial of strength between two men evenly matched if they keep within bounds. Boxing is a manly sport. The

I THINK a series of talks in print by Jess Willard might be of very great value.

First, because so many persons are interested in him and his recent victory that they will read whatever he says while teachers of physical culture would be unable to hold their reading audiences. Science is dull until one acquires the taste for it by training. But the intimate details of the life of any one to the fore in the public mind will always gain the public ear and eye.

Second, because the champion represents the joy of activity. Nobody can be happy who sits still a great deal. Happiness is in doing. Jess Willard knows this and will doubtless preach it. He will be sure to tell you that it is not enough to be good, but one must do good.

Third, because he is a product of the life

And How YOU Can Gain Health, Strength, Muscles, and Manhood

A Remarkable Series of Lessons

By JESS WILLARD, Champion Physical Giant of the World

REV. "BILLY" SUNDAY said: "If every American boy was as husky as Jess Willard, and would let cigarettes and booze alone, we would have the Devil worried."

I'm not a smoker nor a drinking man—if I was my muscles would not be what they are. Healthy minds and morals are usually found in healthy bodies. If I can help the men and women, boys and girls of America to have stronger bodies and better health, it will be more real satisfaction to me than winning the boxing championship of the world.

Of course, my muscles did not grow without training. And my health and strength will not stay with me without giving attention to them. But I can tell you just how I got my physical development and exactly how I have and always intend to maintain it.

Next Sunday I shall begin the first of a series of lessons on health and strength and clean living. If you will follow my suggestions you won't know yourself a year from now—and you will add ten or twenty years to your life.

It is a great pleasure to me to be able to talk to, and, I hope, to help men and women, and boys and girls who read this newspaper, in my own way concerning the bodily training that they need to help them in their life battles.

Having three daughters and a son myself makes my advice regarding the training of children the result of personal knowledge of their needs, and what they should do and what they should avoid.

I base my advice largely on my own experience. I am not a musty old professor theorizing as to this and that, but a man of perfect physical health gained through certain methods that I know are right, because they have served to bring me to the goal of my ambitions.

First let me speak of the stomach, the care of which I cannot speak of too strongly. I believe that a majority of children's ills, and the ailments that come later in life, can be laid to abuse of the stomach—in other words, impairment of digestion. This means lack of power to assimilate food, thin blood, emaciation and other kindred complaints.

My word of advice to the youth of this land is, never eat unless you have an appetite. Don't eat because "it's time to eat." Some may say in answer to this, "I have to eat at certain times or I will miss my meal altogether."

Better far to miss a me[illegible] stomach with food that it does [illegible] yet, make it a point to have an [illegible] business to create one. A w[illegible] be as much as you need. [illegible] whole distance home, walk [illegible] stagnant blood circulating [illegible]

Out West those of my [illegible] always are out an hour or [illegible] rising. I don't mean th[illegible] particular form of exercis[illegible] errands or chores at this t[illegible]

When breakfast is ready [illegible] house with cheeks flushed and [illegible] food does them good. The [illegible] That is the way I was brou[illegible] indigestion is except what I [illegible]

Start the day right. Ge[illegible] fast, and you will feel well [illegible] day.

I speak of that p[illegible] say much about the old [illegible] of plenty of sleep, not bolt[illegible] body knows those rul[illegible] country, so just add [illegible] you'll have the doctor [illegible] money's coming from [illegible]

Boys, take care of [illegible] mean big, smooth muscles [illegible] bright eyes, clear com[illegible]

Now for exercise. W[illegible] to take physical exercise [illegible] him is what not to do. O[illegible] ing, he [illegible] etter. That goes without [illegible] ing that I will u[illegible] know he will have enough [illegible]

Let every boy take up one of these three branches of athletics if he is a[illegible] your yard, throw the [illegible] by striking the ball with [illegible] against the fence [illegible] gotten plenty of fresh [illegible] certainly sleep sound and [illegible] brighter, healthier boy.

Get a set of boxing gloves and a boy of your own weight and height. Start to box—not fight. Let the other boy do the boxing—you simply ward off his blows. Learn to ward off (throw off) his glove when he tries to hit you.

After you realize you know how to prevent him hitting you, then start in to wa[illegible] with the other hand strikes a blow. [illegible] do not start in by showing the [illegible] but. If you do and you can hit [illegible] boy, you will have no sparring partner. If you can afford it, join some gymnasium where there is a good instructor. He will take an interest in you. Do not learn boxing in order to be able to lick every boy on the block. These Lessons Are for Men and Women, Boys and Girls and Include All Kinds of Exercises for Young and Old. Willard Says:

"If you will follow my suggestions you won't know yourself a year from now—and you will add ten or twenty years to your life."

Rev. Father McGrath Says:

Rector of the Catholic Seamen's Mission.

"THERE is an axiom as old as the hills, 'A sound mind requires a sound body.' This is a 14 karat truism. Mental activity sets into operation many faculties, senses and members of the human structure. The gray matter called brain, the memory, the intellect, the heart action, the entire nervous system are all set in motion when the mind becomes active. Due to mental activity, these faculties and senses become taxed to their capacity, then overtaxed, followed by depression (a weakening effect), and ere long we behold a weak human being, a prematurely old form abounding in ills and physical weaknesses of various kinds.

The remedy for such a resultant is found in athletics—a care about the physical frame and its contents while this mental activity is going on.

The child must be brought to a knowledge of the fact that the cultivation of the physical faculties must go hand in hand with mental culture in order to reach a high point of excellence in education. When entering the athletic world youth must not be carried away with the idea that a Samson sprang up in a day—that the heroes of the diamond, of the gridiron, of the tennis court, of the track, etc., were made in a day. Rather they were the result of grave study, care and coaching. Every child should be educated in the necessity of cultivating a liking for some athletic game.

My favorite sports are boxing, handball and baseball. These three, in my opinion, develop the entire makeup of youth. These three require a certain amount of strength and an abundance of preparation before one can step forth as an exponent. In acquiring the art of these branches of athletics every faculty of the human body is developed. The intellect is brought into play; the eye, the arms and legs, with their components, likewise play an important part; hence the entire man becomes active.

Boxing occupies a very high place in the heart of the American youth. This fact is evident when some one not to his liking takes the palm from one of his own, and vice versa. To become proficient in this branch of athletics one is forced to build up a good physical frame. Out into the open he must go—along the roads, over the hills and through the dales, time and time again—returning to his place of training to have his muscles eased and his blood sent circulating to every part of his body by a good rub-down. While boxing, his intellect is most active, his whole frame is in motion. He thinks, he acts, he moves his body quickly—he is a gigantic human machine all in action.

The same might be said of those branches of athletics termed handball and baseball. Athletics, if indulged in for the great good to be derived, are the forerunners of a ripe old age. But if abused they send the misuser to the operating table and a premature grave.

Cleanliness of life plays an important part in the drama of the athletic life. Unless the athlete has a clean life, unless he avoids the [illegible] ments of the world, he soon becomes a failure—a physical wreck. You cannot build in the daylight and destroy in the night and expect success. It is easier and quicker to tear down a house than to build it up. What has taken months and years to round into shape you can render beyond repair in a few weeks—yes, a few days. Sometimes the athlete has been ill-advised by his coach and sent down the road of ruin very quickly. I know of several instances of young men, realizing the necessity of a sound body [illegible] mind, who hankered to the evil advice of the [illegible] and became physical wrecks.

The best men in the country pause annually and betake themselves to some obscure place for rest and athletic exercise. In the best gymnasiums of the city we can find daily men from various walks in life, such as clergymen, lawyers, doctors and statesmen, spending at least one hour boxing, wrestling or running.

Cleanliness of life and athletics are friends. Worldliness and athletics are enemies; one tries to overcome the other, worldliness generally conquers, and the promising athlete [illegible]

You cannot have health if you eat bad food. You cannot be an athlete if you [illegible]

Let every boy take up one of these three branches of athletics if he is a [illegible] your yard, throw the [illegible] by striking the ball with [illegible] against the fence [illegible] gotten plenty of fresh [illegible] certainly sleep sound and [illegible] brighter, healthier boy.

Get a set of boxing gloves and a boy of your own weight and height. Start to box—not fight. Let the other boy do the boxing—you simply ward off his blows. Learn to ward off (throw off) his glove when he tries to hit you.

After you realize you know how to prevent him hitting you, then start in to wa[illegible] with the other hand strikes a blow. [illegible] do not start in by showing the [illegible] but. If you do and you can hit [illegible] boy, you will have no sparring partner. If you can afford it, join some gymnasium where there is a good instructor. He will take an interest in you. Do not learn boxing in order to be able to lick every boy on the block. Learn to box, and box often in a gentlemanly way, so that if an occasion should arise you will be able to defend yourself from some loafer or thug

Rev. Dr. Keigwin Says:

Pastor of West End Presbyterian Church, New York.

One great mistake which the world makes is in the separating of the various functions of the [illegible] being into entirely separate departments. For a man to spend all his time developing [illegible] other things is to make a man a more animal.

The [illegible] purpose is very clear on the surface of [illegible] and when we learn to disregard that [illegible] [illegible] women who are mentally physically and spiritually [illegible]

MOVING PICTURES

By HARLOW HARE.

Here's a breezy bit of motion picture news—or statistics, if you prefer it is announced that the film industry now ranks fifth among the industries of the United States. This fact was discovered by the census bureau.

Up to the beginning of December, 1914, the American film manufacturers turned out 16,000 separate reels of negative film, from each of which thirty-five positive copies were made. As the average reel is 1,000 feet, it will be seen that 560,000,000 feet of film were made—including both negatives and positives. Boiled down to more comprehensive measurements, you will discover that we have manufactured 68,000 miles of motion pictures—enough to stretch around the world a little less than three times. And it only required seven months to turn the trick.

If you like figures, here is another one of the industry. The cost of producing the ordinary kinds of originals, or negatives, is at least $2 a foot, which means that during the first eleven months of 1914 about $20,000,000 was spent making negatives. The 350,000,000 feet of copies cost four cents a foot, which brings the total for positives up to $17,000,000, making a grand total of $37,000,000 expended on the motion picture films.

These figures seem large, but there is still room to get in the amounts already mentioned, for we have not added in the picture houses which have become so important to both manufacturer and exhibitor. As a rule it is safe to gross from $30,000 to $600,000 on a single production you can easily see how film may be added to the purse, no matter what cost of making the film. It will have to feature that star yourself. With hundreds of feature film companies now in operation, a new one is being born every week, it is apparent that the field is not over-run with actors.

As a picture fan knows, it is attractive. There are perhaps 11,000 and 15,000 people employed in the entire industry, more than 10,000 being actors.

It has been said that there is a great deal of money in the pictures of one's children, and it seems to be true. In the Boston theatre district there are a half dozen theatres devoted to the photo-play, and the prices charged for admission upon the average are higher than for the legitimate houses which have been compelled to reduce their prices in order to meet the increasing competition of which will be known locally in the near future.

K Lait and Jean Havez, two of the best liked writers on American stage 20 years ago, will appear at the Globe the first time the week. He will direct a comedy with Mary E. Irwin and company in the Stevens-Hitchcock-Cohan play. It will be, style, dialogue and Gobie specialties and will be up and-date, the comedy, the contortionist, and knockers and White in a new edition of their old offering. The second act of the new serial film, The Perils of the Sea, featuring Lottie Pickford will be shown.

t. James Theatre.

The American actor and impersonator, Richard Hatcher, who made his professional debut in Boston, will head the bill at the St. James this week. Hatcher, who was last seen here as Napoleon in "Madame Sherry," will present a series of character impersonations taken from life. Others on the bill will include Morris and Allen, "Rough Boys who sing and dance"; Ed. Lee Jones and Dorothy Wentworth in dainty diversions, Les Georges, Spanish acrobats, and Demarest and Collette, in a musical novelty.

Modern Theatre.

Franz Molnar's international success, "The Devil," presented with great success by George Arliss, has proved a popular offering and will be offered for the coming week at the Modern Theatre. There are no parts in the play for leading man or leading woman, the entire production depending upon the work of the supporting company. The performance of the bill will include the second episode of the "Hopeless," the Gaumont weekly, several one-reel comedies and dramatic productions as well as some high class vaudeville.

Howdoin Square Theatre.

Madame Sarah Adler will appear in the powerful moving picture, "Sins of the Fathers," which has been seen with much success, and now that it is to the screen. It is a story of love, containing the message for good all across "The Black Box" will be featured in a new episode and the Scollay Square Olympia.

A host of unusual artists and several novelties will be shown at the Scollay Square theatre this week. Chief among the latter is a unique vaudeville offering, Kelley and Fenton, a ventriloquist and talking act. Walter Fowler and Lillian Lucas are popular favorites. "The Sword" Hooks and Harris, the Hindu magicians company, and the three Lorraine sisters will be seen for the first half of the week.

Franklin Park Theatre.

The program for the coming week at the Franklin Park Theatre will be quite up to the standard of the past. It will include Victor Moore and his company in a unique vaudeville offering, Kelley and Fenton, a ventriloquist and talking act. Walter Fowler and Lillian Lucas are popular favorites. "The Sword" Hooks and Harris, the Hindu magicians company, and the three Lorraine sisters will be seen for the first half of the week. The vaudeville contingent will be headed by the Great Richards in "The Artful Beautiful," one of the most artistic performances that ever played in Boston.

Scenic Temple.

Owing to the great demand for a return engagement of "Tillie's Punctured Romance," the management of the Scenic Temple has decided to run this picture again on Wednesday and Thursday of this week. "Three Weeks" will be the feature picture for Friday and Saturday.

Somerville Theatre.

The Somerville Theatre Stock Company is an emphatic success. There can be no question about it. The production of "Within the Law," the offering last week, was all that could be desired and even the most exacting lovers of the drama were unanimous in agreeing that it was one of the very best presentations seen in New England in a long time. "Madame X," this week's attraction promises to create an even greater interest in the company and Helen Grayce, the leading woman who will be well known to amusement goers on account of her pronounced success in Malden last season. All the members of the organization will have parts very well suited to their talents, and no one who unknowingly decides to spend an evening at the theatre will be disappointed. Mr. Evans will be the husband who turns as erring wife adrift. Messrs. Burroughs and Leach will be the eccentric comedy parts and the first to win favor with the public, while Arthur Stein will be the villain. Larogue Eleanor Armstrong will have a character part. The Friday afternoon receptions promise to become a very popular feature of the engagement.

JAPANESE RATS COULD EAT OUR FEET

THE United States of America, three thousand miles wide, stretching from ocean to ocean, is very rich and might easily be very powerful.

The United States is proud of itself, and among its citizens some foolish are indifferent to danger and say there is no possibility of successful attack. BUT—

The dinosaur was the biggest of the animals. , He was more than one hundred feet long, monstrously heavy and powerful, and he laughed at attack, while he lived in the soft marshes and mud and ate the rank grass.

The dinosaur had not always been so big, powerful and complacent. He was the result of evolution and growth. He began, you may be sure, as a fighter, and continued to be a fighter ready for battle until prosperity made him too sure of himself.

The United States was not always so big, so powerful.

It also began as a fighter, ready with men and ships. Its greatness, prosperity and complacency are the result of evolution and slow development.

The huge dinosaur disappeared, because, while he was building up a huge body and terrific weight HE NEGLECTED HIS FIGHTING TEETH.

The scientist will tell you that there was no animal powerful enough to encounter the dinosaur, matching him ton for ton in mere weight. But he was wiped out of existence by small, dangerous enemies with sharp teeth, THAT ATTACKED HIS FEET, GNAWED THEM, AND DESTROYED HIM.

This country of ours is great and powerful. No nation could match it BILLION FOR BILLION in money, no nation equals it perhaps in massive power, mental weight or courage of citizenship.

But let the United States look out that the Japanese rats with their sharp battleship teeth do not gnaw our national feet and make us know how the dinosaur felt in the old days.

Go to the museums where they keep reconstructed types of the various kinds of dinosaur. You will see the giant, hundred feet long, you will see the little carnivorous dinosaur, and you will learn that the little one with the sharp teeth and the long mouth survived the other, BECAUSE HE COULD FIGHT and bite.

The history of nations on this earth is much like the history of the big dinosaur, complacent but helpless, the little dinosaur with the sharp teeth, and the rodents that gnawed the big dinosaur's feet.

Persia was great and powerful, so great that all Persia laughed when threatened by little Greece—the nation of fighting men and ships. The Persian king first asked what that little nation was, where it was, what it was like. He subsequently said to his servants: "Remind me that some day I must destroy that people."

Then the "some day" came—just as it has come to every great nation, just as it will come to the United States of America if this country neglects the teachings of history and of TO-DAY.

When "some day" came, the Persians had six hundred thousand men, many elephants and horses on one side of a river. The Greek Alexander had thirty thousand men on the other side.

He crossed the river, beat the six hundred thousand, and when the Persian king offered him half of his lands and his daughter, and more money than the Greek had ever dreamed of, the Greek answer was: "When you write to me, write to me as your master and as the ruler of this country."

We laugh at the suggestion that the United States might be attacked. We look with contempt on the little brown men across the Pacific, ceaselessly building and preparing.

But Japan is bigger compared with us than was Macedonia compared with Persia.

And the brown men of Japan do not seem as barbarous or ridiculous to us as the Macedonians with their queer ways and their strange speech seemed to the people of Persia, or to the cultivated men of Athens.

The greatest danger in the world is size, wealth, power and self conceit WITHOUT weapons or preparation.

One great nation after another has gone down because it did not realize that mere bigness was a handicap and a danger without preparation.

This nation can live, develop its power, usefulness and happiness as no other nation has ever done, if it will only free itself from the curse of egotistical, stupid, self-satisfied indifference to facts.

If we have the intelligence and the will to make ourselves ready for attack, we shall not be attacked. But a nation unarmed is like a giant asleep, and we are unarmed now.

Uncle Sam is a giant, and his navy is a toy boat—a thing for a child to play with.

Can you imagine how that old dinosaur felt before the first sharp-toothed rat began gnawing at his feet? Can you imagine how he rejoiced in his size and in his power as he ate the nice grass and laid down in the mud?

He felt as the United States now feels—rich, powerful, big.

But how did the big beast of ancient days feel when the change came, when the rats began gnawing his feet, when the flying dinosaur with the sharp teeth bit his neck, when he shook his feeble, dull head at one end of the long backbone and felt the biting of his tail at the other end?

He felt as the United States will feel when that "some day" comes—if the nation remains unarmed.

We shall feel the Japanese rats gnawing at our feet in the Pacific or some other rats with sharp teeth gnawing at our feet in the Atlantic.

We shall feel trouble down at our Panama Canal or up at our northern boundary.

And we shall then envy those nations that had the brains to provide themselves with teeth, as the big, helpless vegetarian dinosaur envied his carnivorous brother when "some day" came along.

Now the prosperous, intelligent citizen so called, proud of his country and of its power, thinks that we have ships enough, or perhaps need NO ships.

How do you think that man would feel, how do you think YOU would feel, if we were at war to day with a real power, or with half a dozen real powers?

We hesitate. A first class ship costs ten millions.

How much do you think we would be willing to pay for ten first class ships—if we were at war?

New York City alone would gladly buy and pay for twenty of them, without a question or any bargaining, rather than submit to one bombardment. And the same is true of San Francisco and of Boston and a dozen American cities.

Our national experiments with flying machines for defense and submarines for defense are about on a par with some little boy's experiments with wireless telegraphy.

We are behind all the principal nations in submarines; we are a pitiful joke in the way of army flying machines.

Many of us feel that we cannot afford the expense of these submarines, which cost a few hundred thousand dollars, or of the flying machines that cost a few thousand dollars.

We could build a thousand flying machines, buy [illegible] ten millions of dollars.

How many dozens of millions do you think we would [illegible] pay for a thousand [illegible] dynamite bombs [illegible] enemy fleet off our shores?

How much [illegible] country would give for [illegible] submarines to sail out from San [illegible] from the Golden Gate [illegible] other end of the Panama Canal [illegible] actually at war?

Poor old dinosaur. When the rats began to bite him, when his well armed enemy, like the sabre toothed tiger, began ripping up his stomach, he would have given a good deal for a set of teeth and a little activity. But regrets did him no good.

We know how he [illegible]. We know how the great nations have lived and died.

We have the money that [illegible] to get national fighting teeth. We are able to supply ourselves with active fighting men—if we will.

It will be our own fault if we allow ourselves to drift into bigness, wealth, sloth, and into an unprepared condition, as the biggest animals and the biggest nations have done in the past.

Poor old Uncle Sam. Sad and depressed he looks at the "fighting navy" that his children give him. You can't work without tools; you can't fight without ships and cannon.

Other nations are prepared and ready in spite of poverty.

Germany has made the most marvelous sacrifices. She has fed sixty millions of people, living in a country smaller than one of our States. She has built up a commerce all over the globe, eclipsing the commerce of any other single nation. At the same time she has carried an army of a million, with reserves of many millions, she has carried a fleet constantly growing.

See what the Japanese have done and are doing. And look at the United States, the national vegetarian dinosaur of the twentieth century, the huge, big, peaceful, unprepared animal among the nations.

By the slightest effort of will, by the slightest exercise of our imagination, we can understand that what has happened in the past will come again.

By merely reading the newspapers we could realize, if we would, that war starts as fire starts—unprepared, uncertain, ANYWHERE.

We take out fire insurance and buy fire extinguishers. We maintain in every city and village fire companies and fire apparatus.

But we have [illegible] apparatus worthy of the name; no war insurance, no readiness for that which is bound to come, if we tempt fate and the fighting rats as did the old dinosaur.

We need a great fighting navy, plenty of battleships, plenty of submarines, plenty of air ships, to train the fighting men.

We need a great COMMERCIAL navy, owned by the people of the United States, operated for the benefit of the nation not for profit, but for usefulness, and as a warning against aggression.

We ought to have a fighting fleet as big as any in the world—fighting ships on the sea, below the sea and up in the air.

And we ought to have a commercial fleet ten times as big as any other to carry every ton of our iron, coal, grain, lumber or other freight, a fleet of commerce ships owned by the people like the war ships, manned by graduates from the warships, every commercial ship provided with its cannon kept on shore, every one a warning against attack.

Ships cost money, but teeth are cheap at any price. May we not, as a nation, learn the lesson that fate taught the dinosaur, or share that beast's sad end.

Sooner or Later This Country Will Realize the Importance of a Great Navy. Lucky if It Realizes the Truth Before It Is Too Late. This Is a Great Nation, but Bigness Without Weapons Is a Danger. Its Size Is a Menace to a Great Creature, Be It an Animal or a Nation. You Know Probably Why the Dinosaur, Biggest Among the Animals, as We Are Greatest Among the Nations, Died Out so Soon. If Not, This Editorial Will Tell You.

Countess of Warwick Writes of the "War Babies"

"More Glaring Offence to the Creator in One Battlefield Full of Dead and Mangled Humanity Than Has Gone to the Creation of All the Unfortunate Children Who Will Come Crying Into Our Tear-Stricken World"

By the Countess of Warwick,

England's Most Distinguished Woman Social Worker.

THE problem that faces a State when it sends its best and most virile men to kill and to-be killed has certain aspects that few have the courage to handle. For long years, while Europe was an armed camp, the claims of love were admitted amid the demands of war, but now that the dreaded era—which each nation was hurrying through the medium of [illegible] and secret diplomacy [illegible]s, we are without a definite [illegible] the contingents of the [illegible]

The appalling war weeks are none [illegible] to others, I would pray [illegible] ought to be startle—but hope, [illegible] refuge against the ills of [illegible] most terrible catalysm [illegible] agent of democracy and [illegible] [illegible] a rift [illegible] to grass grows the [illegible] while we think of the gen[illegible], hundreds of the [illegible] I bravest lie in their [illegible] of Mother Earth a [illegible] has been done by [illegible] fittest shall leave be[illegible] a share of the white [illegible]

[illegible] of the middle and [illegible] ppened to be engaged [illegible] a been wise and patri[illegible] marry and their wives have [illegible] full of courage as of love [illegible] men have often been [illegible] church an absurd tax, for [illegible] own itself quite inadequate [illegible] and trumpery restrictions, [illegible] of peace and a scandal [illegible] no not been relaxed. The [illegible] are allowed a special license and in [illegible] unmarried without the aid or [illegible] sanction of the church

The Stupidity of the State Laws.

As we know, the State decided to recognize unmarried wives of the nation's brave defenders, a courageous and proper step that evoked the wildest protests from the narrow [illegible] and the fanatic [illegible] believe that man was made for morality rather than that morality was made for man. They did not pause to reflect that our absurd and complicated divorce laws are the chief cause of [illegible] unions and that divorce is hardly less [illegible] for the poor to obtain than are decent housing, warm clothing and nourishing food. Yet in making this concession to the men who are offering their lives in their country the genius of red tape contrived to assert itself. Hard though it may be to realize, it is a fact that if a man home on leave marries his unmarried wife in order that his children may bear his name, his wife's allowance ceases because he comes under the head of those who have married after enlisting. The very quintessence of stupidity could have achieved nothing finer.

Unfortunately the majority of those at the front are unmarried. It was considered sufficient to find them physically sound, to vaccinate and inoculate them and then to send them to take their chance. The question of mating them for the sake of the years to come was never considered. There is no department of War Office [illegible] that considers the [illegible] goods, and to the mass of the unthinking [illegible] whole question savors of indecency. We [illegible] state in our midst of evil and its consequences, but any honest outspoken recognition of the great sex problem and its relation to the national need is taboo.

I have even heard brainless people of both sexes deploring eleventh hour marriages and finding them "undignified." Apparently they are looking for some miracle by which [illegible] who are too old or physically unfit for military service will also a generation that shall rival the one sacrificed to the gods of war. I have looked in vain to the speeches of statesmen for a single recommendation to our defenders to marry and leave behind them some pledge of their affection, some asset for the real national treasury, that does not consist of gold as is popularly supposed, but of vigorous men and [illegible] anxious to live for their country as they are willing to die for it.

Why a Wife Is a National Asset.

To be sure, every wife would have cost the country fifteen dollars a month for the term of the war, and this thought may have given our prudent legislators pause, but I venture to suggest that a wife as a national asset is cheap even at that price. The State has been content to penalize the regulation of irregular unions and the church has gone its accustomed way, fulminating in feeble fashion against everything that savors of the abnormal. It has divided its time between complaining about race suicide and conniving at race murder.

The balance has been redressed to some extent, in fashion at once inevitable and unsatisfactory. The billeting of great masses of young men in various centres throughout the country, the appeal of a uniform to the other sex, the opportunities that the new life has afforded are about to result in a vast number of illegitimate births. I have heard of this from many quarters and have every reason to believe that no district in which large numbers of soldiers have been gathered together will prove an exception to the general rule. Whatever the moral aspect of the question, it cannot be overlooked or ignored. Nature has intervened, and we know that the great majority of these children will be males, for whenever there is war the male birth rate rises, suggesting that there are things on heaven and earth beyond the reach of our philosophy. I deplore the promiscuity, though I believe that a wise and daring statesmanship ready to meet new conditions with new remedies would have avoided it, but I would like to plead for the foolish mothers to be, often little more than girls, and for the babes who in many instances will never see a father's face.

I am not urging humanity in place of morality, for most people lack the moral courage to listen to such a plan, is rather in the interests of the State that I urge the proper and even generous treatment of those who, before this year is ended, will have entered the world unwanted and unwelcomed. They will be the children of men in the first flush of manhood, of men not lacking in courage and character, or they would not have joined the colors, of men whose fault was that they could not resist temptation in its least resistible form. We must think of the psychology of the soldier who knows that in a few short weeks he may be among the nameless dead, who has embarked upon the greatest of all adventures and says: "Let me rejoice and be merry, for to-morrow I die." Doubtless in many cases he will return and marry the mother of his child if fate permits, often he will not return, and a soldier's death may well clear a soldier's name.

It should not outrage morality to see that the children born of men gone to the front should be looked after by the State who into the mother is unable adequately to provide for them, and it should be possible, too, in cases where the father returns and marries the mother of his child, that such marriage should make the child legitimate. It is not a large concession, in many European countries, France included, marriage stones for previous indiscretions, and if this were so in England there would be a much greater tendency to regularize irregular unions for the children's sake.

If nothing is done, hundreds of young mothers who succumbed to exceptional temptation will be outcasts and while a certain number of them will find their way to the streets, many children will die at birth or soon after because their existence is regarded as a disgrace, and doubtless some of the weakest of the mothers to be will descend to crime in the effort to save their names. Under the most favorable normal conditions the lot of the little one will be hard. When this hideous war is over I would like the regimental officers to put the facts fairly and squarely to their men, to ask them to remember the girls they left behind them and to be able to assure them in the name of the government that, if they would on their return marry the mother of their child, that child would become, ipso facto, legitimate.

I am quite sure that many excellent people will find this plea immoral, that they will say it is condonation, that it is removing the burden from those who have transgressed. I deny these suggestions even before they are made. To my mind there is more immorality, more glaring offence to the Creator, in one battlefield full of dead and mangled humanity than has gone to the creation of all the unfortunate children who will come crying into our tear-stricken world before the year draws to its end. Those who rule over Europe and, being unable to settle their differences, sent millions of men who have no quarrel to deface the earth and slaughter one another, are morally responsible for every change in the normal life of mankind. Those who replenish the earth are better than those who destroy it and the love of a man and a maid, even though it be foolish, selfish and unwise, is finer than the hate of man for man and the rending of limb from limb.

War by Far the Greater Immorality.

War is a monstrous immorality that seeks to destroy the world, the illicit unions, to which I refer in the interest if those who pay the penalty, the mother and the child, are a minor immorality from which with a little care, a little loving kindness and a little foreknowledge, much good, much deep morality may spring.

There is not much time to lose. There will be much opposition to overcome, and the work of helping the helpless will be widely condemned by those who, having no feelings, are always able to control them. But the effort is worth making, and so I plead here, first for ample facilities for those who wish to marry before they go to the war, secondly for the abolition of a policy upon the man who marries his unmarried wife, thirdly for the legitimization of the children whose fathers now at the war come back and marry their mothers, and lastly for some special care of the mother and children themselves whatever happens.

THE COUNTESS OF WARWICK.

BIG NAVY ALONE CAN PROTECT NEUTRALITY, SAYS COUDERT

Noted Authority on International Law Shows Difficulties and Present Perils of United States' Attitude on the War

By FRERERIC R. COUDERT,

Noted Authority on International Law.

The position of the United States at the present time is one of peculiar interest and paramount difficulties. International law grew up in the later middle ages with the growth of nationalities and the destruction of the idea of [illegible] in the Roman Empire and [illegible]

[illegible] of neutrality is no [illegible] rarely recent date, [illegible] writings of internationalists that refused to [illegible] was treated as [illegible] morally exalt[illegible] of neutrality, [illegible] that we too [illegible] upon that [illegible] comparative [illegible] altogether de[illegible] been rec[illegible] that if we [illegible] standard of jus[illegible] tions the one [illegible] most wars must [illegible] and that to [illegible] tion in that [illegible] decent regard [illegible] mankind be [illegible] to the re[illegible] indicated upon [illegible] sacrifice effort [illegible] the neutral nation [illegible] with injury [illegible] its own interests as to justify it in abstaining from taking part in the conflict.

Meaning of Neutrality.

Neutrality must not be confounded with impartiality, to the early stages of the war over controversies in which what about nobly whispering that as good Americans and hence neutrals they did not feel justified in expressing any opinion in regard to the merits of the war.

They pushed the dictates of their conscience as to the invasion of Belgium and other gross violations of public law and morals with a deprecating phrase about the obligations of neutrality.

This attitude is, of course, upon an entire misconception of neutrality and the confounding it with individual detachment. The government has a perfect right to proclaim neutrality and to enforce its obligations; it has no right and never made any attempt to neutralize men's sentiments.

This would be as impossible as to attempt to repress expression of men's religious beliefs or preferences.

Duties of the Nation.

The government of the United States has certain duties under international law. These duties consist, first, in its refraining through its officers or agents from doing any act fairly to be construed as an aid to either of the belligerents, and, second, from preventing individuals from doing certain defined acts which the usages of nations have held to be incompatible with the legal status of neutrality.

Neutral nations are always in a peculiarly difficult position because an observance of neutrality will sooner or later bring down upon them the condemnation of both belligerents, and one or the other of the belligerents may endeavor to force the hand of the neutral.

It was due to this that after a number of years of endeavor it is clear between the pretensions of Napoleon and the claims of England the United States was finally forced into the war of 1813 to vindicate its own views of international law.

Had it at all times or prior thereto possessed a sufficiently powerful navy to make it respected in Europe the Berlin and Milan decree and the consequent British orders in council would not have grounq American commerce between them.

Both parties to the great struggle then believed that America could not and would not fight.

Not a Military Base.

The underlying principle contained in the neutrality law is that the using of American territory as a military base is contrary to our neutral duties. Difficult questions arise as to whether a submarine manufactured and sent to a belligerent in parts could be condemned under the provisions of the act as a violation of neutrality.

My own view is that such an act would not constitute arming or fitting out a vessel, and this view was that of the State Department under Mr. Evarts in 1875.

Submarines were also fitted out and sent to Russia during the Russo-Japanese war, apparently without hindrance from the United States authorities. Hydroplanes, the Navy Department has held, do not fall within the condemnation of this act, although, apparently, they have judged submarines differently. I do not see any basis for this distinction.

Delicate Questions Arise.

The greater difficulties of neutrality do not arise, however, from matters connected with the enforcement of our neutrality laws. While the individual acting without the scope of these laws is free from the operation of municipal law, there yet remains the three great categories of contraband, blockade and unneutral service. In connection with any one of these questions of great delicacy and difficulty to the neutral do and must arise.

While it is the duty of a neutral government to abstain from taking part in the war and not allow its territory to be used as a base for military operations, yet all commercial transactions of the individual are unaffected by the war of war. Other countries and the neutral individual may continue to trade as heretofore, subject, however, to the right of the belligerent to prevent such trade if it be in articles of so-called contraband or if it be in violation of a legitimately constituted blockade.

Within the category of contraband have been held to fall those articles generally which were of military use to the enemy, and yet as early as in the time of Grotius it was recognized that there were many articles capable of a double use, that is of an innocent use or of a warlike use, dependent upon whether they were used by the civilian or the military population.

New Classification Made.

Thus gradually grew up the category of so-called "conditional contraband goods, that is, goods that might be used by a belligerent provided that they were such as could be useful to the enemies' military forces and provided that they were destined for those forces or to a besieged or fortified place.

The main [illegible] regard to the distinction between the two [illegible] the old tradition constantly varying with the metl[illegible] of warfare. [illegible] in one case destination to the enemy's country is sufficient, and in the other case there must be some proof by means of destination or otherwise that the goods are to be used for military purposes.

There is no general agreement of the nations and never has been on the category either of absolute or of conditional contraband. This was notably so in the case of the Franco-Chinese war as to rice and the Russo-Japanese war as to cotton, etc.

The declaration of London, not being law, each belligerent would have a general right to declare as absolute and conditional contraband any articles that he so chose, subject to protest from neutrals that he was including articles generally conceded by nations to be within the third class, that is, so-called innocent goods.

Give Cause for War.

How far the right to make these classifications is limited has never been determined. It is, of course, conceivable that a nation might so far push its belligerent rights on the contraband question as to go more neutrals as to drive them into war, but there seems to be no other limitation upon this category.

There has been of late years, and especially in America, a loud cry for what is called immunity of private property on the high seas. It is argued that under rules of modern warfare, private property on land, save in special exigencies, is immune from capture and that the same rules should apply to property on the seas.

Strange indeed to see how old ideas are recurring, under new circumstances and clothed in a slightly different verbiage, create the impression of originality, something in the nature of a sensation, at least as far as the newspapers are concerned, has been created by the proposition of the unofficial spokesman of Germany in this country, Dr. Dernburg.

This gentleman claims that he has the approval of leaders in Germany for his proposition and that it is one which Germany would accept as a basis of peace. Predictions of the [illegible] assertions it has [illegible] ation [illegible] ular fashion and would at first blush appeal to any one who had not given the matter considerable thought. The main proposition, stated in his own words, is as follows:

"The great highway on which thoughts and things travel is the high seas. I can with full authority declare any limitation by my country as to world dominion [illegible] but is also modest on the one and must be objected on the other hand not to know that such a state will never be tolerated by the rest.

"Events have shown that world dominion can only be practiced by dominion of the high seas, the aim of Germany is to have the seas as well as the narrows kept permanently open for the free use of all nations in times of war as well as in times of peace.

"The sea is nobody's property and must be free to everybody. The seas are the lungs from which humanity draws a fresh breath of enterprise, and they must not be stopped up.

Ask Open Door Policy.

"I personally would even go so far as to neutralize all the seas and narrows permanently by a common and effective agreement guaranteed by all the powers, so that any infringement on that score would meet with the most severe punishment that can be meted out to any transgressor."

And as a corollary of such freedom of the seas he asks for the freedom of cable and mail communication with all countries, whether belligerent or not, and co[illegible] with all a general open door policy.

Analysis will show that this very vague proposition really resolves itself into the old one of immunity of private property from capture on the high seas.

Probably he intends to include the abolition of contraband and blockade, but even with this wide extension it is not new. Freedom of the high seas in the sense that Dr. Dernburg uses it can mean nothing less than this:

First. That it is based on the false assumption that private property on land during war is respected.

Second. That the proposition is ancient, and Third. That it is impracticable and indivisable from the standpoint of the interests of the United States of America.

Reply to These Propositions.

Considering these propositions seriatim.

(1) It is easy to see that the assumption as to private property on land during war is erroneous.

To be concrete, let us take the case of the Belgian and see how far, in any real sense, private property is immune in war. The fantastic taxes imposed upon the unfortunate Belgians completely demonstrates the fact that unorganized plunder has ripened into systematic, methodical, calculated confiscation.

In addition, the prouective power of property has been destroyed and while the individual may not have been deprived of his house unless it were necessary for military purposes, his earning capacity has been destroyed and his country, as far as the Belgians are concerned, cut off from communication with the rest of the world.

That this population must rely on American charity to sustain life indicates to what extent the value of their private property has been destroyed.

Owner Deprived of Use.

The object of the belligerent is to stagnate national life completely. Every factory in North France is used, not for the benefit of its owner or of the population, but for the benefit of the conquering invader, to sustain his armies and to recruit his treasury.

Under these circumstances, it matters little that technically the title to the property may remain in the private owner. The occupied country is utterly prostrated as far as business is concerned and private property rendered practically useless to the possessor. War is not merely a contest of armies—it is also a contest of exhaustion between people so that the beaten nation may find the situation intolerable and finally cry for peace.

Most modern wars have been determined much more by this complete prostration due to the stagnation of national life, caused by the pressure of the enemy upon all property engaged in business activity, as much as by actual battles.

War of 1898 Cited.

(2) Nor in this situation, although doubtless it has been more cruelly pressed than ever before in modern war, something unknown or unrecognized. One of the mildest of conflicts, inspired with the least national passion or resentment and a minimum of cruelty or oppression was the Spanish-American War in 1898.

The Supreme Court of the United States had, in connection with that war, to consider the question of private property of the enemy. A case arose growing out of the taking by the officers of the United States government of certain boats belonging to Cubans and Spaniards and lying in the harbor of Santiago after its capitulation.

These boats were retained and used for months by the government, and suit was brought by their owners for their use on the ground that under the accepted canons of international law, the rules of civilized warfare, and specifically under the instructions issued by the President of the United States for the direction of military authorities, private property was to be respected, and yet the Court held during the war with Spain:

"Cuba was enemy's country, and all persons residing there presumptively enemies, whether Spanish subjects or Americans, were to be deemed enemies of the United States, their property enemy's property and subject to seizure, confiscation and destruction.

"Property in the harbor after the capitulation of Santiago remained enemy property, and seizures thereof by the United States were acts of war."

Cry of Non-Maritime Powers.

This idea of exempting private property at sea is neither original nor disinterested. It has been the cry of every nation with inadequate sea power who has felt the pressure of war from a dominant maritime power.

Even greater men than Dr Dernburg have suggested it, for the idea was put forth by Frederick the Great and Napoleon, both speaking in high-sounding phrases of the rights of private property and the laws of nations, but each naturally and necessarily prompted by the dictates of the interests of their own nations.

Frederick the Great having no sea power, naturally desired that the population of his country might be sustained during war by supplies from over the sea, which under existing conditions could be cut off in the west of trouble with a maritime power. Apparently while he was in alliance with Great Britain it did not occur to him to make the suggestion.

The suggestion came from the Republic of America, and it naturally pleased him and further put the Republic of France into a condition whereby living up to its agreement made it impossible to ever make war upon him at all.

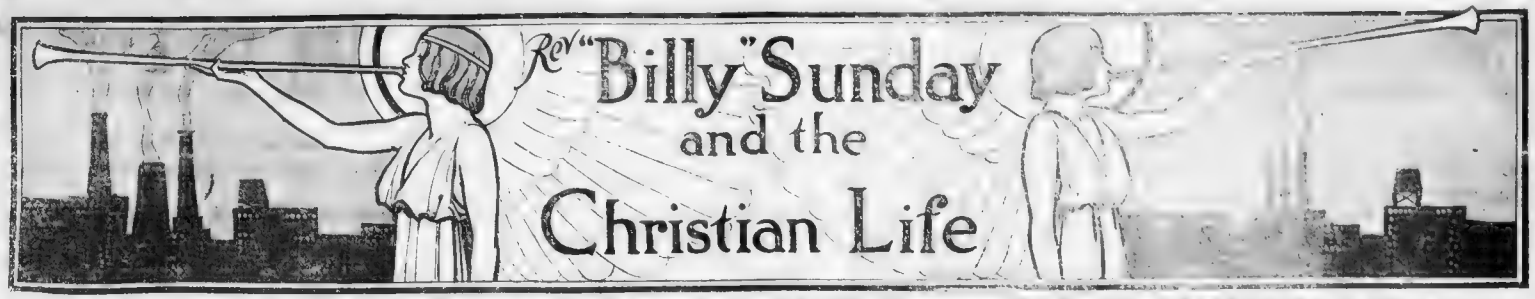
Treaty of U. S. and Prussia.

The treaty between the United States and Prussia of 1785, in article 23, provided that:

"All merchant and trading vessels employed in exchanging the products of different places and thereby rendering the necessaries, conveniences and comforts of human life more easy to be obtained and more general shall be allowed to pass free and unmolested and neither of the contracting powers shall grant or issue any commission to any private armed vessels empowering them to take or destroy such trading vessels or interrupt such commerce."

This treaty is referred to in the treaty of 1825 with Prussia, which is still in force. It will be remembered that in connection with the claim of the United States to be compensated for the injury done in destroying the American vessel Free, the German government admitted its liability as predicated upon this old treaty of 1825 with Prussia.

This treaty contains most interesting clauses as to the limitation to be imposed upon the right of visitation and search and provides that goods taken as contraband shall be paid for. Its doctrine is, of course, the reverse of the practice now pursued by the German Empire of destroying by torpedoing enemy vessels or vessels carrying contraband and incidentally greatly jeopardizing human life.



"Wine Is a Mocker, Strong Drink Is Raging: and Whosoever Is Deceived Thereby Is Not Wise"

—Proverbs, Chap. xx., vs. 1

Rev. Mr. Sunday's Widely Famous BOOZE SERMON

Rev. W. A. Sunday, Who Is Now Conducting a Vigorous Evangelical Campaign in Paterson, N. J.

28. And when He was come to the other side into the country of the Gaderenes, there met Him two possessed with devils, coming out of the tombs, exceeding fierce, so that no man might pass by that way.

29. And, behold, they cried out, saying, What have we to do with thee, Jesus, thou Son of God? art thou come hither to torment us before the time?

30. And there was a good way off from them a herd of many swine feeding.

31. So the devils besought him, saying, If thou cast us out, suffer us to go away into the herd of swine.

32. And He said unto them, Go. And when they were come out, they went into the herd of swine; and, behold, the whole herd of swine ran violently down a steep place into the sea, and perished in the waters.—Matthew, Chap. viii., vs. 28-32.

I WILL take my text from the 8th chapter of Matthew, the 28th to the 32d verse, describing the casting out of the devils which entered into the swine.

Here we have one of the strangest scenes in all the Gospels. Two men, possessed of devils, confront Jesus, and while the devils are crying out for Jesus to leave them, He commands the devils to come out, and the devils obey the command of Jesus.

The devils ask permission to enter into a herd of swine feeding on the hillside. This is the only record we have of Jesus ever granting the petition of devils, and He did it for the salavation of men.

Then the fellows that kept the hogs went back to town and told the peanut-brained, weasel-eyed, hog-joweled, beetle-browed, bull-necked lobsters that owned the hogs that "A long-haired fanatic from Nazareth, named Jesus, has driven the devils out of some men and the devils have gone into the hogs, and the hogs into the sea, and the sea into the hogs, and the whole bunch is dead."

And then the fat, pussy old fellows came out to see Jesus and said that He was hurting their business

A fellow says to me, "I don't think Jesus Christ did a nice thing."

You don't know what you are talking about.

Down in Nashville, Tenn, I saw four wagons going down the street, and they were loaded with stills and kettles and pipes.

"What's this?" I said.

"United States revenue officers, and they have been in the moonshine district and confiscated the illicit stills, and they are taking them down to the Government scrap heap."

Jesus Christ was God's revenue officer. Now, the Jews were forbidden to eat pork, but Jesus Christ came and found that crowd buying and selling and dealing in pork, and confiscated the whole business, and He kept within the limits of the law when He did it. Then the fellows ran back to those who owned the hogs to tell what had befallen them, and those hog owners said to Jesus:

"Take your helpers and hike. You are hurting our business."

And they looked into the sea and the hogs were bottom side up, but the men were right side up. And Jesus said, "What is the matter?"

And they answered, "Leave our hogs and go." A fellow says it is rather a strange request for the devils to make, to ask permission to enter the hogs. I don't know—if I was a devil I would rather live in a good, decent hog than in lots of men, and if you will drive the hogs out you won't have to carry slop to him, so I will try to help you get rid of the hog.

And they told Jesus to leave the country. They said: "Leave, for you are hurting our business."

"Have you no interest in manhood?"

"We have no interest in that; just take your disciples and leave, for you are hurting our business."

That is the attitude of the liquor traffic toward the Church and State and Government and the preacher that has the backbone to fight the most damnable, corrupt institution that ever wriggled out of hell and fastened itself on the public.

I am a temperate Republican down to my toes. Who is the man that fights the whiskey business in the South? It is the Democrat! They have driven the business from Alabama; they have driven it from Georgia, and from Mississippi, and Tennessee, all but three cities; and out of 100 counties in Kentucky. And they have driven it out of 147 counties in Texas, and out of North Carolina. And it is the rock-ribbed Democratic South that is fighting the saloon. They started this fight that is sweeping like fire over the United States. You might as well try and dam Niagara Falls with toothpicks as to stop the reform wave sweeping our land

The Democratic party of Florida has put a temperance plank in its platform, and the Republican party of every State would nail that plank in their platform if they thought it would carry the election. It is simply a matter of decency and manhood, irrespective of politics. It is prosperity against poverty, sobriety against drunkenness, honesty against thieving, Heaven against hell. Don't you want to see men sober? brutal, staggering men transformed into respectable citizens?

"No," said a saloon keeper, "to hell with men. We are interested in our business, we have no interest in humanity."

After all is said that can be said upon the liquor traffic, its influence is degrading upon the individual, the family, politics and business, and upon everything that you touch in this old world. For the time has long gone by when there is any ground for arguments of its ill effects. All are agreed on that point.

There is just one prime reason why the saloon has not been knocked into hell, and that is the false statement "That the saloons are needed to help [illegible] taxes." The saloon business has never paid, and it has cost fifty times more for the saloon than the revenue derived from it

I challenge you to show me where the saloon has ever helped business, education, church morals or anything we hold dear.

You listen today, and if I can't peel the bark off that damnable fallacy, I will pack my trunk and leave. I say that is the biggest lie ever belched out

The wholesale and retail trade in Iowa pays every year at least $500,000 in license. Then if there were no drawback, it ought to reduce the taxation 25 per cent per capita. If the saloon is necessary to pay the taxes, and if they pay $500,000 in taxes, it ought to reduce them 25 cents a head. But no, the whiskey business has increased taxes $1,900,000 instead of reducing them and I defy any whiskey man on God's dirt to show one town that has the saloon where the taxes are lower than where they do not have the saloon. I defy you to show me an instance.

Listen! Seventy-five per cent of our idiots come from intemperate parents; 80 per cent of the paupers; 82 per cent of the crime is committed by men under the influence of liquor; 90 per cent of the adult criminals are whiskey made. A Chicago newspaper kept track for ten years and found that 53,556 murders were committed by men under the influence of liquor.

MR. SUNDAY'S FAMOUS "BOOZE" SERMON IN FULL

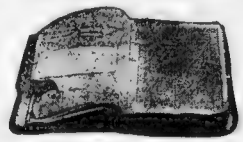
How Whiskey Made a Murderer

The Story of One "Water Wagon" Drummer

What We Have To Thank the Saloon For.

My First Bible

I am the Bible at a second-hand store in St. Louis, in 1886, for 35 cents I wouldn't take $3,50 0 for it today.



Now Worn Out

"The saloon comes as near being a rat hole for a wage-earner to dump his wages in as anything you can find."

"Then I will pick the boys up and give them to you."

A man says. "Hold on, not that boy, he is mine."

Then I will say to you what a saloonkeeper said to me when I protested: "I am not interested in boys; to hell with your boys."

"Say, saloon gin mill, what is your finished product?"

"Bleary-eyed, low-down, staggering men and the scum of God's dirt that have gone to the mat and taken the count."

Go to the jails, go to the insane asylums and the penitentiaries, and the homes for feebl minded. There you will find the finished product for their dirty business. I tell you it is the worst business this side of hell, and you know it

Listen: Here is an extract from a magazine of November 9, 1907, taken from a paper read by a brewer. You will say that a man didn't say it:

"It appears from these facts that the success of our business lies in the creation of appetite among the boys.

"Men who have formed the habit scarcely ever reform, but they, like others, will die, and unless there are recruits made to take their places our coffers will be empty, and I recommend to you that money spent in the creation of appetite will return in dollars to your till after the habit is formed."

All the Saloons Not Worth One Boy.

What is your raw material saloons? American boys. Say, I would not give one boy for all the distilleries and saloons this side of hell And they have to have 2,000,000 boys every generation. And then you tell me you are a man when you vote for an institution like that! What do you want to do, pay taxes in money or in boys?

I feel like an old fellow in Tennessee who made his living by catching rattlesnakes. He caught one with fourteen rattles and put it in a box with a glass top. One day when he was sawing wood his little five-year-old boy, Jim, took the lid off and the rattler wriggled out and struck him in the cheek. He ran to his father and said: "The rattler has bit me." The father ran and chopped the rattler to pieces, and with his jackknife he cut a chunk from the boy's cheek and then sucked and sucked at the wound to draw out the poison. He looked at little Jim, watching the pupils of his eyes dilate and watched him swell to three times his normal size, watched his lips become parched and cracked and his eyes roll, and little Jim gasped and died

The father took him in his arms, carried him over by the side of the rattler, got on his knees and said: "Oh, God, I would not give little Jim for all the rattlers that ever crawled over the Blue Ridge Mountains."

And I would not give one boy for every dirty dollar you get from the hell-soaked liquor business or from every brewery and distillery that is side of hell.

Listen! In a northwest city a preacher sat at his breakfast table one Sunday morning The doorbell rang, he answered it, and there stood a little boy twelve years of age. He was on crutches, right leg off at the knee, shivering, and he said: "Please, mister, will you come to the jail and talk and pray with papa? He murdered mamma. Papa was good and kind, but whiskey did it, and I have to support my three little sisters. I sell newspapers and black boots. Will you go up and talk and pray with papa? And will you come home and be with us when they bring him back? The Governor says we can have his body after they hang him."

The preacher hurried to the jail and talked and prayed with the man. He had no knowledge of what he had done. He said: "I don't blame the law, but it breaks my heart to think that my children must be left in a cold and heartless world. Oh, sir, whiskey, whiskey did it."

The preacher was at the little hut when up drove the undertaker's wagon and they carried out the pine coffin. They led the little boy up to the coffin, he leaned over and kissed his father and sobbed, and he said to his sisters "Come on, sisters, kiss papa's cheeks before they grow cold." And the little hungry, ragged, whiskey orphans hurried to the coffin shrieking in agony. Police, whose hearts were adamant, hurled their faces in their hands and rushed from the house, and the jailer fell on his knees and lifted his clenched fist and tearstained face and took an oath before God, and before the whiskey orphans, that he would fight the cussed business until the undertaker carried him out in his coffin

You men now have a chance to show your manhood. Then in the name of your pure mothers, in the name of your manhood, in the name of your wife and the pure, innocent children that cling to your knees and twine their arms around your neck, in the name of all that is good and noble, fight the curse. Shall you men, who have your hands on the ballot, stand in that ballot hold the destiny of womanhood and children and manhood, shall you, the sovereign power, refuse to rally in the name of defenceless men and women and native land? No!

I want every man to say: "God, you can count on me to protect my wife, my home, my mother and my children and the manhood of America."

By the mercy of God, which has given to you the unshaken and unshakable confidence of her love, I beseech you make w fight for the women who wait tonight until the saloons spew out their husbands and their sons, and send them home maudlin, brutish, devilish, blear-eyed, bloated-faced drunkards.

Moral and Religious Questions from Troubled Readers

Questions Answered Today.

LETTERS from Elizabeth Gale, asking "IF NOBODY CAN BE A CHRISTIAN WHO DANCES," and from Morris E. Richards, inquiring whether Christ literally meant that NO RICH MAN COULD ENTER INTO THE KINGDOM OF HEAVEN, were printed in this section last Sunday, and some of the answers received are printed today. Elsewhere on this page are three more questions from our readers, and the replies to these new questions will be published next Sunday.

One May Dance to Heaven — or to Hell.

To the Editor:

"IT is never the thing itself, but it is the attitude we take toward it which makes or breaks our lives."—(Sears).

"Whether, therefore, ye eat or drink or whatever ye do, do it all for the glory of God."—(Corinthians x., 31.)

Now, dear lady, it is all up to yourself. One may dance right down to hell or straight into heaven. We have our choice because our will is left unfettered.

Here in your case, in my opinion, dancing is an innocent pleasure, and Jesus, who always looked into the core of things and never judged from the act itself, would surely disagree with Mr. Sunday on this question. Did he not say that "As a man thinketh in his heart, so he is?"

DAVID HOECKE.

Won't Want to Dance If Truly Converted.

To the Editor:

PLEASE tell Elizabeth Gale that Christ has no connection with the devil in any form, and that when she is truly and soundly converted she will not want to dance. Let her go down on her knees and give herself unreservedly to God. Let her cut all the shore lines that the devil has hold of, and she won't have any desire for dancing or other sins.

This is my experience after thirty-five years in Christ's service. I was once a very worldly girl and loved dances and all of the other things of the devil.

Yours in his name,

MRS. EMMA LEE.

By REV. A. DWIGHT
Of Middletown, N. Y.

To the Editor:

THE dance is not the dry rot of society. It is not immoral unless it is a disreputable dance. Dances do not ruin more girls than anything else.

Do not worry about being divorced from Jesus Christ. Do not leave your church unless you are not wanted by its constituents; then go where you are welcome. Do not dance with the devil, but find some more agreeable person. Do not worry; worry leads to insanity. Do not let your heart be disturbed, as it is a very vital organ. It is possible—and very probable—that Christ would disagree with his great modern-day disciple, Mr. Sunday.

If you love to dance and have never had a wicked thought or impulse connected with dancing, and yet truly want to be a Christian, dance—dance respectfully—and God be with you.

Reasons Why Dancing Does Us Good.

To the Editor:

I READ what Billy Sunday says about dancing and am accepting your invitation to express myself on the subject.

My observations are made from personal experience covering a period of at least two years or since the beginning of the "new dance craze." During this period I have acted as instructor and exhibition dancer in restaurants and cafes, and I have had excellent opportunity to study every effect dancing has on the morals of the young. And I find that dancing:

(1) Provides an agreeable means of exercise, reduces excess flesh to normal. Builds up thin people to normal. Clears the mind.

(2) Induces healthy perspiration.

(3) Sets blood tingling in veins. Makes us happy.

(5) Does away with social boredom. Lessens desire to overeat and drink and helps digestion.

(6) Affords young people something to do in idle hours.

(7) Prevents desire or inclination toward immorality.

(8) Makes one take more interest in personal appearance.

(9) Cultivates liking for good music, and an appreciation of classic dancing.

Of course, there are always exceptions to the rule, but considering the great number of people who dance there is scarcely any evil resulting from this most interesting pastime. Those who go wrong through dancing would have gone quicker in idleness or just as quick in other amusements. I could give you hundreds of individual cases that apply to the above list, but I won't take up any more of your time or space.

A. B. CONKRIGHT.

Why Dancing Is Like the Liquor Question.

To the Editor:

THE dancing question, in my opinion, is in the same class with the liquor question.

A bartender said to me one day: "The most of our business comes from you moderate drinkers, you men that take your drink and get out." That started me to thinking. I had always said that there was no harm in a man drinking if not to excess; maybe not to that particularly man, but I happened to remember that verse in the Bible which says: "You are your brother's keeper."

Perhaps drink was doing me no great amount of harm, but by patronizing those places I was helping that much toward their continued existence and thus helping to send some other poor man to a drunkard's grave.

Now, the same situation occurs in dancing. The young lady says she has never had one wicked thought or impulse connected with it, and, no doubt, dancing has never done her any harm personally. But has she ever stopped to think of the thousands of others who have been ruined by it? Does she realize that by patronizing dances she helps just that much to keep them in existence and thus send some other poor girl to hell?

PAUL C. GAY.

Dedicate Yourself and Your Money to Christ's Service.

By REV. CHARLES A. EATON,
Pastor of Madison Avenue Baptist Church, New York City.

THE words of Jesus spoken to or about the rich young man enunciate a great principle. The application of this principle must be made by each one according to his best moral and mental light. When Jesus looked upon the young man he saw that there was a lack. He saw a good young man, but his goodness had cost him nothing. This is the most popular form of goodness in the world. The kind of goodness which Jesus practiced and demands of His followers is expensive. There is no easy way of being a Christian. Christ without His cross would never become the world's Redeemer. Christians without a cross simply deceive themselves without deceiving any one else.

The reason that Jesus demanded of the rich young man that he sell all that he had and give to the poor lay in the fact that the Lord saw the weak spot in his character. The young man did not believe that spiritual realities were worth more than everything else in the world. When Jesus tested him he failed and went away sorrowing.

The young man's special temptation is common to all who possess money. Great wealth is more dangerous to character than poverty, and both constitute nearly always a misfortune. It is not a sin to be rich if the riches are obtained by honorable means. But if the possession of riches keeps a man from spiritual regeneration, then the rich man has gained the whole world and lost his own life. It is hard for those who have riches to enter into the kingdom of God because the kingdom of God is righteousness, joy and peace in the Holy Spirit, which is essentially unlike wealth in method and in results. Money is materialism raised to its highest power. Men often think that they possess riches, when the fact is that riches possess them. The moment this happens the man is lost. The poor man has little to give up. He cannot master the world because he lacks the money, and money in the world is power. The rich man can master the world to some extent. This creates an interest in material things, and a false faith in their permanency. Under this delusion spiritual things take on an air of unreality, and this is why Jesus said it was so hard for those who have riches to enter into the kingdom.

The gentleman who writes as to his personal duty will have, in the last analysis, to decide the matter for himself. Without knowing anything of the facts, I would venture the opinion that he is under no obligation to give away everything he possesses to the poor. That might be the worst thing he could do for those to whom he makes the gifts. He is under obligation as a follower of Jesus to examine closely the means and methods by which he makes his money. If his help are not paid their fair share, instead of giving away everything to the poor he ought to increase the wages of his workers, not as charity, but as an act of justice. If his position is powerful enough to make him a menace to honorable competitors, he ought to use his influence to help his neighbor rather than destroy him.

These are details which none but the man himself can understand, and he alone is responsible for them. The main thing is to dedicate himself and his money to the service of Jesus Christ, who gave Himself to man without reserve. A life growing out of such a dedication becomes the most beautiful thing in the world. Its business is a sacrament and service, and the money possessed becomes in very truth a means of ministry and blessing. Our friend ought to look after his own family; he ought to provide for his own old age; but in addition to this, he ought to dedicate his manhood and his money to the betterment of his fellow-men.

One Woman's Experience with Dancing.

To the Editor:

I BELIEVE I was converted when I was twelve years old, yet I learned to dance between the ages of fifteen and seventeen. I was born and raised a Methodist. I can certainly say that if you once learn to dance you grow to live it, and find it an enjoyment not easy to give up.

I would go to dances, enjoy myself, as I thought, and then when communion Sunday came I would sit in my seat with a heart beating like mad. One minute I'd tell me to commune, one would say do not commune. If I would overcome the latter mind and commune I would feel better, and still I would go and dance again and then feel like a "guilty dog."

Dancing is something we cannot give up of ourselves, but we must ask God to take the desire from us. And when we feel condemned ourselves then we will know it is not right for a Christian to dance.

All the talking we might do to one to keep him from dancing will do no good. Until the individual feels guilty himself he will not cease to dance.

I married a deacon in the church, during the time when I loved to dance. He would not allow me to go to dances, and I felt that to be a deacon's wife I must be a true Christian, hence I never danced again. God has wonderfully blessed me, and today I am willing to give my life for Him, for He says, "Who so shall lose his life for me shall save it."

MRS. VICTORIA DUKE.

Honestly Acquired Wealth a Blessing.

To the Editor:

NO man can get into heaven because of his riches, but he may in spite of them.

A man is not saved because he is poor, nor lost because he is rich. According to the teachings of the Bible, a man is saved if he meets the conditions of salvation and lost only when he refuses to do so.

Wealth, honestly acquired, is a blessing to the world. But wealth striven for as an end, instead of a means to an end, may become a master instead of a servant, and, in that case, might prevent its possessor from grasping "eternal life."

O. W. WEBSTER.

Christ Never Advocated Dancing.

To the Editor:

ELIZABETH GALE says she loves to dance. The Bible says: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, with all thy soul, with all thy mind." It also says: "Thou shalt have no other gods before me."

She says she has never had any bad thoughts or impulses in connection with the dance. Can she say as much for her male partner in the dance? Would she find as much enjoyment in dancing if her partner were a woman instead of a man?

I think she is deceiving herself in regard to being a Christian. Evidently she prefers being a church member. Can she find in the Scriptures where Christ or his disciples advocated dancing or participated in it?

I would advise her to take her sorely disturbed heart to her Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ, in earnest, honest prayer, and I am sure it will not be long before she will have a quiet and happy heart and will be thanking "Billy" Sunday for the words he uttered to disturb it.

A TRAIL HITTER.

Dancing Never Brings Real Happiness.

To the Editor:

IT is impossible for you to be a true Christian if you find pleasure in dancing. Probably you seem to enjoy it for the time being, but it is only lust. There is no genuine happiness created. God cannot be with you when you indulge in such pleasure, and he does not in any way approve of it for a Christian.

One reason why dancing is not for Christians is found in the Scriptures, where it tells of one of Jesus' followers who was beheaded as the result of dancing.

Give up dancing and become a true Christian. It may seem to you an awful sacrifice at the first, but you will soon realize that you are really happy. This applies not only to dancing, but to all other worldly pleasures.

With God's help you can do this. Just trust in Him, ask Him to help you, read the Scriptures daily and attend prayer meeting. You will then find real pleasure.

A CHRISTIAN.

3 Perplexing Questions

To the Editor:

I have read every word in your wonderful Billy Sunday supplements, but in the last two you have started discussions on religious questions which interest me more than anything else you have printed.

The letters on dancing and the letter on whether rich men can get into heaven ought to be read and thought over by everybody. What a splendid thing it is for a great newspaper to open its columns to an uplifting and instructive discussion of the moral and religious problems of life.

Christ is not here on earth now to give answer to the perplexities of inquiring minds as He did two thousand years ago. But with your columns open to the ablest and best interpreters of the Bible, as well as to the people of common sense and practical experience in life's problems, you are doing a very valuable service in supplementing the work of the churches.

There is one question I would like to ask your readers to answer:

Is it possible to follow God's command to "Love thy neighbor as thyself?"

Does this mean to treat your servants and employes just as well as your own family? To give your cook as good a room and bed as your own? To see that the janitor's children have as good clothes and food and doctors and schools as your own children? To be as thoughtful, kind, considerate, indulgent and generous to every man, woman and child you meet as you are to your own husband, wife, children, parents and relatives?

If "Love thy neighbor as thyself" means all this, is it practicable—can it really be done?

If it doesn't mean this, then what does it mean?

JOSEPH L. ROBERTSON.

Does the Devil Cause Pain?

To the Editor:

Can the devil make you sick or cause you pain? I was an earnest Christian for fourteen years, but I have fallen into evil ways. I am suffering from a painful illness which is said to be incurable. Am I now being punished by the devil for the years when I led a righteous life?

A BACKSLIDER.

What Do We Gain By Praying?

To the Editor:

I have just read that the Archbishop of Canterbury (Episcopal) advises mothers and friends to pray for the safety of ffriends in the army, and also to keep praying for the souls of the dead soldiers. The Catholic Church also always encouraged praying for the dead.

This whole matter of prayer is a very interesting one to me. Jesus was constantly at prayer, and St. Paul said, "Pray without ceasing." But I would like to know what are proper subjects to pray about. We all pray for advice and guidance, but there are many other things that most of our would like to pray for if it was proper and would do any good.

If we may pray for rain or good harvests or a safe journey, or the end of the war—why should there be any limit to material things we may pray for? Is it right or wrong or useless to pray for more salary, better business, and even such a thing as an automobile—things which are worthy and harmless and which other good, but more fortunate Christians, have?

JOSEPHINE KERR.

To the Editor:

OUR friend Richards' query, "Can only poor people get into heaven?" can best be answered by himself, so far as it relates to himself. He states he is a prosperous business man; he therefore has evidently made a success; in short, he has used the talent that was given him by God. If his success has been attained by a strict adherence to the Golden Rule there is very little doubt that Brother Richards knows what heaven is. A person will enjoy or suffer heaven or hell as the case may be, according to his actions here on earth.

What is heaven and what does it mean? Is it an endless reign of unbounded joy and happiness for the righteous after they have finished their earthly existence? Is heaven the atmosphere, with the souls of the departed floating in the air, or is heaven the happiness that comes over one who is inspired to noble deeds?

Every person at some time or other has felt elated to the point of happiness from some good deed he may have performed, and that same person has been in hell from some wrongdoing either to himself or somebody else. Irrespective of what all our learned men might try to teach us, and with all due respect to them, it is possible that heaven and hell are with us right here on earth. To my way of thinking there is an imaginary line, and on whichever side of the line a person stands they are either in heaven or hell.

Individually, we cannot stand still—we must either advance or decline. We must either improve mentally or morally or both ourselves. The poor therefore haven't as much chance of getting to heaven as the prosperous business man. And why? Simply because they are poor, because they haven't used the talents God gave them, they haven't answered opportunity's knock.

Shakespeare says, "There is a tide in the affairs of men which taken at the flood leads on to fortune." This is nothing more or less than opportunity, and is given to everybody. Now all things that we receive come from God; and if we grasp opportunity we are merely using our talents.

We find in the Bible that God gave certain talents to his servants, and to those of his servants who grasped their opportunity, and became successful, he said unto them: "Well done, thou good and faithful servant; thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many. Enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

To accumulate wealth, for the sake of owning so many dollars, is in my estimation wrong doing, and such a person is in my mind a sinner, but he who is successful in his own particular calling, providing that his success has been built upon sound principles and in keeping with the Golden Rule, such a person is entitled to the fruits of his labor, so long as he be just to himself, and to his fellow-men, and in my mind that person is a Christian.

If you are happy, you are in heaven. If you are unhappy, you are in hell. Keep on the right side of the line.

Cannot Serve God Best by Dancing.

To the Editor:

IT is a very sign that Elizabeth Gale is wrong in her question when she says her heart is surely disturbed. Can it be that she or anyone can best serve God by dancing? No. The real test of love for God is to deny things. He asked us to do so. Elizabeth Gale's case is no exception. She must fight and win her own battle.

It is not sufficient nor to be expected that to become a Christian means no more resistance from within than without. You cannot become a perfect ideality in a moment, and you will have to stand frequent examinations before God. In progress you will not feel defiled, but when you are standing still you are going back, and your heart is troubled.

QUINCY CARR.

How God Will Change the Dancer's Heart.

To the Editor:

I DO not believe that any truly converted person has any desire to dance. As one who has been interested in Christian work for years my experience has been that those who dearly loved the dance hall had no desire for such things after they gave their hearts to God.

I know a young lady in Muskogee, Miss., who, while she was devoted to Christ, were anxious about their daughter, who was a very pretty dancer and loved to dance. She was anxious to become a Christian, but was not willing to give up dancing. Her parents and the minister kept telling her that she would have to give it up.

Once to a revival meeting after the preacher had tried for a long time to get her to become a Christian and failed, I told her to give her heart to God and become a Christian and that she could go to all the dances that she wanted to. She said: "Can I?" And I said very faintly," one went forward to the altar, much to the satisfaction of her parents and the minister.

Years afterward I met her, and she said: "Well, you were right, for I have not had the least desire to dance since." That is like way God will change your heart if you will let Him.

What the Bible Says About Dancing.

To the Editor:

SINCE the discussion of dancing arose not much attention has been paid to the numerous things the Bible has to say about it. If we are to take the Bible from Mr. Sunday's standpoint I would like to have him explain some of the following references to dancing:

"Let them praise His name in the dance; let them sing praises unto Him with the timbrel and harp."—PSALMS 149-3.

"Thou hast turned for me my mourning into dancing; thou hast put off my sackcloth, and girded me with gladness."—PSALMS 30-11.

"Again I will build thee, and thou shalt be built, O virgin of Israel; thou shalt again be adored with thy tabrets, and shalt go forth in the dances of them that make merry."—JEREMIAH 31-4.

"Then shall the virgin reoice in the dance, both young men and old together; for I will turn their mourning into joy, and will comfort them, and make them rejoice from their sorrow."—JEREMIAH 31-13.

"And see, and behold, if the daughters of Shiloh come out to dance in dances, then come ye out of the vineyards, and catch you every man his wife of the daughters of Shiloh, and go to the land of Benjamin."—JUDGES 21-21.

"And the children of Benjamin did so, and took them wives, according to their number, of them that danced, whom they caught; and they went and returned unto their inheritance, and repaired the cities, and dwelt in them."—JUDGES 2-23.

"A time to weep, and a time to laugh; a time to mourn, and a time to dance."—ECCLESIASTES 3-4.

"And David danced before the Lord with all his might; and David was girded with a linen ephod."—II. SAMUEL 6-14.

"They are like unto children sitting in the marketplace, and calling one another, and saying, We have piped unto you, and ye have not danced; we have mourned to you, and ye have not wept."—LUKE 7-32.

"And when the daughter of the said Herodias came in, and danced, and pleased Herod and them that sat with him, the king said unto the damsel, Ask of me whatsoever thou will and I will give it thee."—MARK 6-22.

"And the servants of Achish said unto him, is not this David the king of the land? Did they not sing one to another of him in dances, saying, Saul hath slain his thousands, and David his ten thousands."—I. SAMUEL 21-11.

"And it came to pass, as the ark of the covenant of the Lord came to the city of David that Michal, the daughter of Saul, looking out at a window, saw King David dancing and playing; and she despised him in her heart."—I. CHRONICLES 15-29.

"Now his elder son was in the field; and as he came and drew nigh to the house, he heard music and dancing."—LUKE 15-25.

Christ Would Not Frown Upon Innocent Dances.

By REV. ARTHUR CRANE,
No. 840 Flatbush Avenue, Brooklyn.

CHRIST'S religion is not a system of evils like Judaism. It does not consist of "must" and "must not." It is spiritual unfoldings in the soul that trusts Jesus as a personal saviour. And then it is a growth from a spiritual embryo to maturity. It is an implantation of the divine life, which, as it grows and expands, gradually but surely crowds out the old life, with its sensuousness.

It cannot be expected that a babe in Christ will live on the same high spiritual plane as the Christian who has been instructed by the Holy Spirit through the Word, and has grown thereby. The Apostle Paul said, "When I was a child I acted as a child, but when I became a man I put away childish things." The influence of Elizabeth Gale reveals her lack of spiritual growth.

Again I would say that there is dancing and dancing. The happy, exuberant dancing of a crowd of wealthy and well-known friends may be innocent and frivolous to the mature spectator, who can say with Jesus, "I have meat to eat that ye know not of," but I do not think that He can make the sea to smile and the valleys to laugh and sing when the corn is ripe would frown upon it. He would have our hearts full with an even gladness.

But I never saw any permanent fellowship with Christ be found in formal dances. It shows a "mile to the front" a divided heart. Society, churches are worldly and unsound, and in many instances deathly, and so true Christian can find enjoyment in their formality and hollowness.

The Holy Spirit says, "Whatsoever is not of faith is sin," and I doubt that Elizabeth Gale would dare to ask God's blessing on such an occasion.

Again, for the mature Christian there is the choice of evil. Dancing will do nothing that may cause my weaker brother to stumble or stumble. I have known cases where girls by their dress and dancing have put a spark to the "powder barrel" of passion in a young man, and he has gone from the respectable dance to places that are better left unnamed.

I believe the severe denunciations of Mr. Sunday were aimed principally at the public dance halls—those places that have to be licensed when no decent things needs license.

I would suggest that Elizabeth Gale ask herself honestly whether she would love the dance if there were none of the opposite sex present. If she cannot answer yes, she may be sure her love for it is wrong.

I would also advise that she speak to the Lord about it. Also, even though they be "clergymen," are apt to be biased. Early training, environment and custom work powerfully. Mr. Sunday is evidently a lover of baseball, although he is undoubtedly a Christian. The late Ann Jones used to say that he would let his boy play baseball until he was sixteen years of age. If he came into doing so after that, he would slam him over the head with the bat. In some modern baseball, with its accompaniments of wicked money and time and gambling, the best thing it is to hold up Christian character, and its scrubbing but a stumbling path to heaven.

My answer to Elizabeth Gale is that I know many children of God who dance but that I do not know a single mature and consecrated Christian who dances.

No Hyphenated Citizenship in the Kingdom of God.

By REV. DAVID J. BURRELL
Of Marble Collegiate Church, New York.

THE words of our Lord about the impossibility of a rich man's salvation are explaining in His own words. "How hardly shall a man who trusteth in his riches enter into the kingdom of God."

The trouble with the young ruler was that he trusted in his wealth. In such a case it is obviously impossible for a man to be on good terms with God.

Anything that stands between a man and the service of God is really an idol. There can be no divided allegiance. There is no hyphenated citizenship in the kingdom of God.

A millionaire may be a good Christian if his trust is in his wealth to save him and help him by stewardship; that is, his money must be held on call and yielded up at the demand of God. He then is a proprietary rich man in every farthing of it. In the case of the young ruler the issue was clearly drawn. His wealth was his idol and must be given up.

Any man to whom his money more than he loves God or refuses to honor the divine draft will find it harder to get into heaven than a camel does to go through a needle's eye.

Dancing One of God's Greatest Blessings.

To the Editor:

MANKIND has been given a great many blessings by God, and foremost among them is dancing. Oh, the joy of keeping time with our bodies to the beautiful strains of music! It is the most beautiful giving exercise known, and no young girl who enjoys it can conceive an unholy side of dancing in itself.

Would that some of our great men and women would come out and declare in the face before their Maker and raise a shout for it the height where it belongs.

MRS. W. G. HOLMES.

Christ Did Not Condemn the Dance.

To the Editor:

DANCING has been accepted by man before, during and since biblical times. Christ in one of his parables mentions music and dancing as a means of rejoicing. Christ did not condemn dancing, therefore we, as Christians, can readily say dancing is harmless.

I will speak of the assertion made by Reverend Sunday that "dancing has ruined more girls than anything else." If he will offer proof. If the dance did not exist, and other pleasures, it can also be asserted that intimacy along religious lines has aroused the same passion with the same results. Experience has taught that intimacy between the sexes, when permitted to develop unchecked, can bear undesirable fruits at any time and in any place. We would not say religion has caused the downfall of women; then how can we say dancing has caused the same, when intimacy has been the controlling cause?

Should a church member find the place for dancing or the company dancing has caused him or her to meet one not in keeping with church teaching, he or she should either choose a proper place and company for dancing or let the community see they prefer the world with dancing to the church without dancing.

I regret to say I can't dance and yet be a Christian. I am not your judge. He is to be my judge. No man has the power to judge a person's acts from a religious standpoint. Man may form his belief, but should not pass judgment. "Judge not lest ye be judged." However, I believe, from experience, a person may dance and yet be a Christian.

Marie left the room and Elaine, after contemplating for a moment in keen anticipation what she thought at first was a gift from Craig Kennedy, opened the box. There lay a splendid bunch of long-stemmed red and white roses.

Nestling in the green leaves was a little white note. She picked it up expectantly and tore it open.

Instantly, however, her face blanched. Instead of a billet doux, it was the most fearsome threat yet which the savage Chinese master criminal, Wu Fang, had sent in the vengeful vendetta which he has sworn on account of the loss of the Clutching Hand's millions.

Elaine had scarcely time to exclaim at its dire meaning when Kennedy himself entered.

Elaine was too terrified even yet to speak. All she could do was to hand him the note.

"This first victim shall be Craig Kennedy or your aunt. You may choose. Place the red roses in the window for your lover, the white for the silver-haired one."

"I must look into this at once," he said, lifting the flowers and putting them back into the box carefully, as if he expected trouble to come of the affair.

"You—you'll be very careful, Craig?" pleaded Elaine, as they left the library and went into the hall.

"Very careful—of you," he returned, his eyes meeting hers as for the moment both were oblivious to everything except each other.

"But—you must be careful of yourself, too, Craig," she insisted tenderly.

"I will be—for you," he repeated, with a reassuring smile. "Oh, don't forget to call me."

Quickly he returned to the library, leaving her standing in the hallway. There he had purposely left his stick on the table beside the flowers. He selected some from the bunch of red roses and hastily stuck them in a vase and placed the vase on the window sill. Then he picked up the cane and rejoined Elaine in the hall.

"Don't worry," he reassured her. "Just trust me. I'll see this thing through. Goodbye—and be very careful."

Satisfied he passed as if he had caught sight of a mendicancy officer bearing down on him. There on the window sill of the library was a vase of red roses. Hastily he shuffled off on his way.

As fast as his supposedly bent body could straighten itself safely out he hurried downtown where he reported to the secret apartment of Wu Fang, the Serpent.

Wu, Long Sin and several other Chinamen were gathered about a table on which was a long oblong oak box.

"Red roses," was all that the ex-beggar in his awe at the fierce Chinaman could find words to blurt out.

Wu nodded. "It is well. I will call you again when I need you. You may go," he instructed.

A moment later Wu left the secret apartment, followed by his henchmen, splitting up inconspicuously as they made their way up town.

I had come into the laboratory and, not finding Kennedy, had decided to wait there for him.

"What's the trouble?" I asked anxiously.

"Trouble enough!" he replied, flinging off his hat and coat and throwing on his smock, as he related disjointedly between whiles what had happened.

"And now I'm going to prepare for the attack, whatever it may be," he went on, going over to the table in the laboratory table. "Where's that nitrate—oh, here it is."

For the next few minutes he was busily mixing several chemicals, while I watched him curiously but silently administer.

When he had finished he poured one liquid from a tube into an atomizer, then another of the liquid which he had made into a flask.

"Walter," he asked, getting ready to go out and indicating to me to do the same, "I wish you'd bring along that rug over there by my sink."

I picked it up, wondering what on earth he could want with it, and followed him out into the hall.

"Put it down in front of the door," he directed when we reached the hall.

I placed the rug before the door and he emptied almost half of the contents of the flask on it. Then he entered the laboratory again, taking care not to step on the rug, but over it.

Meanwhile Wu Fang and his lieutenants had proceeded to the basement of our apartment house, after they had made sure that we were still at the laboratory.

First Wu entered the dark cellar cautiously and beckoned to Long Sin and the other Chinamen to follow. One of his followers carried the Black Six detectaphone box. There, on an old rickety table which the janitor, Jensen, sometimes used.

Wu opened the box case and began to look about for a place to install the little listening ear by wires that would run up from this cellar hiding place to our apartment above.

They all looked about. Wu holding a spool of wire and the little detectaphone transmitter in his hand. It was a ticklish mechanical problem to get the thing in quickly and secretly.

"Ugh! Look!" cried one of the Chinamen, pointing toward a corner of the cellar wall.

Wu turned. There was a rat which had run out of a hole, had seen them and scampered quickly across the floor and away safely.

"Wait here," he ordered quickly, leaving his men on guard in the cellar. "Watch and see that no one enters the apartment before I return. I shall be back soon."

It was not very many minutes later that Wu returned to the cellar with a large cardboard box under his arm. As he set the box down on the table, it moved slightly, as if there were something alive inside it.

"No one has gone in, master," reported one of the Chinamen.

Wu nodded and turned to another who had been engaged in charging the rathole in the wall.

"Does it run upstairs?" he asked.

"Yes, master," returned the other.

"Then wait here," ordered Wu, taking up the detectaphone transmitter, the spool of wire and the box.

He left the cellar stealthily and a few minutes later reached the upper hall, which at the time happened to be deserted. Somehow he had obtained a skeleton key which fitted our lock, and with its aid he entered our apartment.

Quickly he looked about the room. Finally his keen judgment told him that the corner by the bookcase was that nearest over the compartment in the cellar in which he had left his lieutenants with the detectaphone.

Wu Fang had a method of wiring in the detectaphone that was all his own. He went over to the corner and drew from his capacious blouse a chisel with which he ripped back a section of the baseboard. After he had removed it he made a little hole in the plaster and lathe on the wall.

Next he drew on a pair of thick gloves and carefully reached into the pasteboard box. From it he drew a peculiar soft, furry creature, yellowish white, long of body and neck, with a very pointed nose and red eyes. It was a ferret.

This ferret, too, was different from other ferrets. He wore a small leather harness around his shoulders. To the harness Wu attached one end of the wire from the spool, and made sure that the spool would unwind readily.

Then he reached into his pocket and drew out something that had been restlessly kicking there—a rat. As he held them, one in each hand, he let the ferret get a good look and smell of the rat as it squeaked in fright.

Finally he pushed the rat into the hole in the plaster which he had made, and an instant later loosed the ferret after it, as if on a leash of wire. There Wu stood paying out the wire as the ferret scampered after the scared rat.

Suddenly, down in the cellar, as one of the Chinamen had been watching and listening a scratching and scrambling preceded by a shower of plaster told him that Wu's plan was working.

The rat, almost scared out of his little existence, came tumbling and scrambling through the hole. The ferret was promptly seized, a moment later, just as Jack and Jill in the rhyme came tumbling down the hill, the ferret popped out hard in pursuit. The Chinaman caught him also, detached the wire from his harness, and pulled thrice, the signal to Wu above.

Wu smiled subtly to himself as he felt the jerks. Quickly the rest of the coil, letting the wire fall down between the walls, then quickly shoved two foot-proof little plugs into pockets on the front of the electric ear of the detectaphone—the transmitter. Lastly, he set the transmitter in the hole in the wall close up to the baseboard and left it replaced. Then he swept up the plaster bits neatly and quietly and writhed his way out, snake that he was, still smiling fiendishly.

Perhaps half an hour after our return into the laboratory after Kennedy had soaked the mat, we had decided after much deliberation to attempt to carry the war into the enemy's country. We left the laboratory, he to seek some clue, I to go down to the Star, where I had a little work to do.

Kennedy had scarcely bade me goodby and turned out of the campus on the avenue, when he happened to see a face in the crowd which interested him.

It was that of the woman who had posed as Elaine's housemaid, Inez. He paused a moment as she went by and gazed after her, but she did not see him. This was too good an opportunity to miss. He turned and followed.

A block away she boarded the subway, and Kennedy did also, taking an inconspicuous place in the crowd on the platform. She changed to a local at Grand Central Station, walked up Park Row from the station, until at last she came to Chatham Square. All the time Craig was warily following.

There in the shadow of the elevated she swung about and entered Chinatown, passing down the narrow street until she came to a typical Chinese restaurant of Mandarin. She entered, seated herself and ordered a bowl of tea.

Inez had not been there long before she attracted the attention of Sam Yow, the proprietor, who came over and sat down while the two conversed in low tones.

"Is the master in?" she whispered.

"No," he replied, "but Long Sin is in the other place."

It was plain that none of the gang dared risk discovery in Wu's own secret apartment unless they could not help it. Even Long Sin, who had some respite from his labors, had gone to another hang-out.

A short time afterward, as they still talked, Kennedy after pausing outside the chop suey joint decided to enter. He pulled his coat collar up and his hat down over his eyes, making himself as much as possible like a Bowery tough.

While Inez and Sam were engaged in earnest conversation he sat down at a table nearby with his back to them and ordered some tea and chop suey. Then he drank his tea and toyed with the food, all the while eavesdropping to catch a fragment here and there of the conversation.

As nearly as he could make out, there was a room somewhere which was at least one headquarters of Long Sin, if not Wu himself. Not a word could Kennedy catch which might recognize him, and he was alone. He had had one such experience which had pretty nearly ended in disaster for himself. He finished drinking his tea, paid his bill and quietly went out.

Around on Park Row again, he stopped in a drug store where there was a telephone booth and called up the agency where operatives he had frequently employed on routine matters like shadowing.

"Can you send Chase down here immediately?" he asked, giving the address of the drug store. "I've a little shadowing in Chinatown for him—and, by the way, I may need to call on the regular police before I get through. You'd better notify them to be ready and I'll stop around at the precinct station, too. Send Chase here right away. I'll wait."

It was only a matter of a few minutes before Chase joined Kennedy, and together they went back to Chinatown, Craig explaining to him in a low voice just what it was he wanted done.

With final parting instructions the young operative entered the restaurant and seated himself, while Kennedy withdrew to a place of greater safety, confident in Chase.

The operative furtively watched Inez and Sam talking until finally she rose and went out to the street door. Chase had already paid his bill, so as to be ready to leave at any time, and he followed just at the moment when she turned abruptly on the street and entered a doorway that led up in the same building, only outside.

Chase paused and thought a moment. What was up there? Should he follow?

Inez had, in the meantime, come to a doorway at the head of a flight of stairs. There she had given the secret rap—a short, a long and short tap.

Long Sin opened the door. "Good morning, mistress," he smiled subtly as he admitted her.

It did not take Chase long, however, to make up his mind. Besides, he could not loiter on the street without attracting attention. This, too, was his opportunity. As Inez let the door shut, it had not quite latched itself.

Chase entered the dark, ill-smelling hallway and mounted the steps cautiously, careful not to make them creak. He paused at each door until he was sure that there was no one on the other side.

At one, however, he could hear low voices. He listened a moment, then tried the knob softly. The door was locked. Carefully he put his foot on the knob and raised himself up by gripping the transom just far enough to peer over.

There were Inez and Long Sin talking earnestly as Inez removed her wraps while Long Sin laid out a couple of opium pipes and cooked two pills of the precious hop with practiced hand.

Chase let himself down as softly as he had pulled himself up, and got away without being seen.

Kennedy returned to the apartment after dispatching Chase on his mission, and there I met him as soon as I was through down at the Star office.

We were talking over our plans when there came a sudden knock at the door. Craig opened it. It was Chase.

"I've found the hangout," he cried excitedly. "It's over that restaurant. You go in by the side entrance and upstairs. I got as far as the door of the den, saw Long Sin and that girl getting ready for an opium jag."

"Fine work, Chase," complimented Craig, seizing the receiver. "Hello—Police Headquarters—let me see—the Elizabeth street station, please."

He waited impatiently "Sergeant," he shouted, "this is Kennedy, Craig Kennedy. You remember I dropped in there a few minutes ago and told you I was on the trail of something. Well, I've got it. The place is over the Mandarin. We've decided to raid it and get them. Not the Mandarin—the side entrance, one flight up."

He hung up the receiver. "Come, Walter," he cried. "You and Chase can help me now."

While we hurried downtown, the police were being detailed for the raid and the patrol wagon was still waiting for the squad.

We drove up in a taxicab just as the wagon swung around the corner. Almost as soon as we, the police were at the side door. Two of them rushed the Mandarin and arrested the taciturn proprietor. The rest battered down the door.

It crashed in, and up the stairs we dashed.

"This door—this one!" pointed out Chase.

It also was locked, but it was the work of only a minute to batter it down. We broke through into the room, ready for anything, man or devil.

It was bare.

Wu Fang had already plugged in the six receivers of the detectaphone and, though we did not know it, was eagerly listening with the others down in the cellar as Kennedy gave his orders for the raid. Not a word escaped their ears. What one of them could not understand another managed to catch and repeat.

"They—muttered Wu, "you must get down there at once."

Tom Ling had already heard what Craig planned and had started on his way, hurried downtown with a speed that would have done credit to an accidental hustler.

Inez and Long Sin had scarcely had time to enjoy half a dozen delicious whiffs before the secret rapping sounded at the door. Long Sin opened it and Tom, usually imperturbable, almost rushed in.

"The master—has learned—the police—raid here," he announced breathlessly.

Long Sin heard and was alarmed. Quickly he shook Inez who was already drowsy, not being used to the dope. She roused herself.

"What's matter?" she drawled.

Long Sin continued to shake her and she got up unwillingly. He locked the door, then opened a secret hatchway leading to a passage below. With Tom to quickly disarrange the apartment, taking down the hangings, rolling up the rugs and stowing everything away.

Wu Fang had outwitted us and saved both Long Sin and Inez by the marvelous little eavesdropper.

It was some time after Kennedy left the dodge house that Elaine returned to the library, still full of the strange note which she had received with the flowers. As she entered she hardly noticed that both Marie and Jennings were there.

She had scarcely awakened from her day dream in which she was walking, as it were, when her quick eye caught sight of the vase of red roses on the window sill. For the moment she was almost unable to speak to her tear and anger at seeing this direct invitation for attack on Craig. She ran to the window, seized the flowers and dashed them to the floor.

"Who put those flowers there?" she demanded of the astounded butler and maid.

Neither of them, naturally, knew a thing about it. Nor did Aunt Josephine, who happened to pass through the room at the moment.

"Oh, I must see him—I must," cried Elaine excitedly, as she hurried out for her wraps.

We returned to our apartment, chagrined, after our flat failure to capture either Long Sin or even get evidence against Wu. It was not at all like Craig feared the ridicule of the regular police, though that was not pleasant. It was the mere fact that he had been outwitted. It worried him.

As we entered the apartment, Craig dropped into a chair, scowling to himself. I watched him in gloomy sympathy. Suddenly his face brightened.

"What do you think they"——

He cut me short with his finger on his lips, pantomiming silence. Instead of answering he wrote on a slip of paper and handed it to me:

"There must be a detectaphone in this room. Talk about the weather—anything—while I locate it."

Finally Craig went over to his desk and took out a small piece of apparatus which seemed to consist of two sets of coils, placed on the ends of a magnet bar. I moved over closer while he fixed the apparatus for action.

To the coils was attached a long flexible wire which he screwed into an electric light socket. Then he placed a peculiar telephone-like contrivance attached to the other end up to his ear. He adjusted the magnet and carried the thing carefully about the room.

At one point he stopped and moved the instrument vertically up along the wall.

"That's a gas pipe," he scrawled on a pad nearby.

"What's the instrument?" I wrote underneath.

"New apparatus to find pipes electrically," he returned still writing. "I thought I could apply it to finding wires and transmitters."

Suddenly he paused and his face wrinkled. He stooped down and made a mark with a pencil on the baseboard. There, back of that board, I knew, must be hidden the little mechanical eavesdropper. As I followed I impetuously reached down and attempted to pull out the board and expose the thing which his delicate telephone detector had traced.

Quickly he caught my arm with a warning gesture in time to prevent me.

It was at that moment that Elaine's car stopped outside the apartment. She had not found us at the laboratory and now had come here.

As Craig was carefully putting back into his desk the detectaphone detector, our door was flung open and Elaine burst in.

"Oh," she cried with an eager sigh of relief at seeing Kennedy all right, as she almost ran toward him. "I'm so glad you"——

She stopped short as Craig motioned to her to be silent. She did not understand, and for the moment stopped nonplused, as he picked up a pencil and began to write on a pad instead of moving her advance.

An instant later her mobile face looked up at him in wonder as she read:

"Every word we say is being overheard through a detectaphone in the wall. Don't be surprised at anything I say."

Then he walked deliberately over to the wall near which the instrument was concealed and leaned down to insure his words being heard distinctly by those listening.

"I am going over to the laboratory for an hour," he said in a loud, distinct tone. "Jameson, will you escort Miss Dodge home?"

"Why, certainly," I replied with alacrity.

But before we left he reached into his pocket and took out the flask and atomizer which I had seen him place there. He poured the contents of the flask on the rug, distributing it evenly, and, careful not to step on the rug, replaced both flask and atomizer in his pocket.

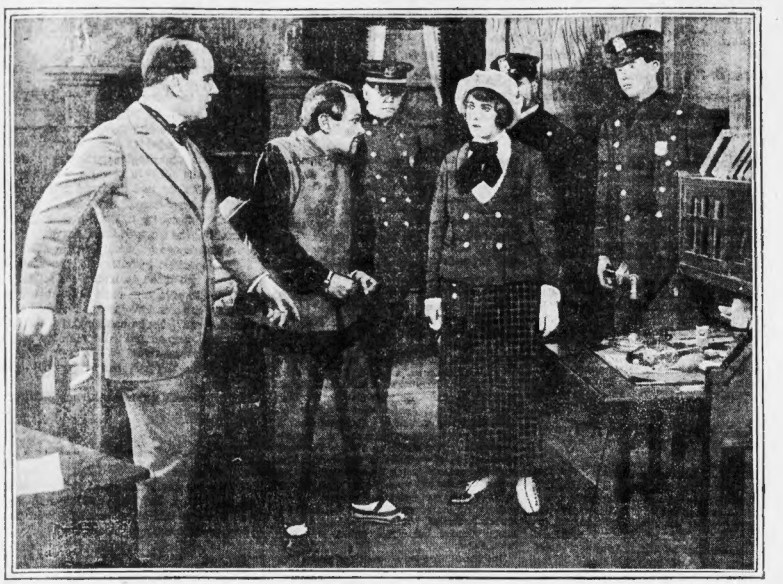
As Craig moved about the room hunting for the transmitter Wu seemed to scent trouble, though he heard nothing. The very silence was enough to alarm him. Still nothing happened.

Wu's interest revived as Long Sin entered and reported how the raid had gone wrong. At a nod from Wu he took his place at the Big Six.

The Chinamen waited until they heard us go out. Then all but one removed the receivers from their ears.



Caught at Last!

"See whether they really go," directed Wu to one of the number, who glided out and up the cellar steps, part way.

In hiding the man watched me hand Elaine into the car and gazed after Kennedy some minutes, then dropped back again into the cellar to report to Wu.

"They have all gone master," he bowed.

"Good," Wu exclaimed, smiling his subtle, sinister smile as he handed Long Sin a vial and a key. "You understand?"

"Yes, master," nodded Long Sin with an evil leer.

He hastily climbed the stairs from the cellar to our apartment. For a few seconds he stood on the rug as he inserted the skeleton key in the lock. Then, swinging the door open cautiously, he entered. He looked about a minute. The apartment was empty.

Slowly Long Sin walked over to the table and began examining the articles on it. Finally he picked up Kennedy's pipe, and again his inscrutable face lighted with diabolical joy.

He took the vial quickly from his pocket, and, with a small, soft brush painted the mouthpiece of the pipe with the liquid from the vial.

He laid the pipe down as he found it and beat a hasty retreat.

We had scarcely time to drive to Elaine's house when a message reached us from Kennedy directing us to return and meet him several squares below our apartment.

We did so immediately. There was Kennedy with Chase and three or four policemen.

"In ten minutes I want you to raid the apartment," he said, looking at his watch. "I am going in there now."

In spite of the pleadings of Elaine he walked off around the corner in the direction of our quarters.

He entered the building and, as he opened our own door, drew a gun, kicking the door open and retreating a step. No one was there and he went in.

Craig looked about a moment. On the surface, nothing had been disturbed. He went through the bedrooms. Nothing was disturbed there.

Slowly he went back again to the doorway, all the time careful not to step on the rug. Starting near it, he began spraying the door with his atomizer.

As the spray fell on the carpet and hardwood it developed Long Sin's footprints exactly.

Carefully Kennedy followed them as the chemicals brought them out. Long Sin had not walked around the room much, evidently, as Craig advanced slowly along the floor, still spraying. As each step came out it was apparent that Long Sin had done little else but go to the table and then leave.

Craig looked at the table a moment. There seemed to be nothing on it that would attract a man of Long Sin's talents. Mechanically, Craig picked up his pipe lying there and looked at it contemplatively. He sniffed at the mouthpiece. There was a peach-stone smell. Then he took up a magnifying glass and examined it. Some one beside himself had touched it.

"Cyanide," he muttered to himself under his breath, laying the pipe down gingerly.

For a moment he thought, then a sudden impulse seemed to seize him. His mind was made up. He moved over closer to the marked baseboard. Suddenly he uttered a sharp cry.

"Hello—central! Help! Help! I'm poisoned!"

At the same time he struck the wall a blow as though he were falling.

Down in the cellar the six Chinamen looked at each other in unfeigned delight as they heard the call for help and the thud followed by suppressed groans and cries.

Quickly Wu pulled the detectaphone receiver off his head.

Long Sin took it and looked at it with a smile of satisfaction. He understood. On the paper was drawn Wu's sign of the serpent, with fangs striking viciously and victoriously.

Beckoning to another of the Chinamen Long Sin went out and upstairs.

Meanwhile Craig, who had been listening at the door expecting some such incursion, heard Long sin approaching. He seated himself in a chair, sprawling out rigidly, eyes closed.

Without waiting, Long Sin and his servant entered stealthily. The Chinaman stood in the doorway and Long Sin slowly crept over to Kennedy's chair.

As he reached down to pin the sign of the serpent on Kennedy's apparently lifeless body Craig seemed suddenly to come to life. He seized Long Sin and they struggled fiercely, while Craig, freeing one hand, whipped out his automatic and fired sideways at the Chinaman in the doorway.

The Chinaman fell, lay there a moment, then raised himself up and with fast ebbing strength managed to crawl ou tof the doorway and down the hall.

It was a death grapple between Craig and the wily Long Sin. At last they had each other face to face. But it was unequal. Short and sharp came the moves.

Craig had in his pocket a newly invented pair of handcuffs which snapped automatically over first one then the other of Long Sin's bony wrists. Then he pressed the bracelets tighter until even Long Sin winced.

As Craig stood panting over his prisoner, the wounded Chinaman staggered downstairs until he almost fell into the cellar.

"Master," he gasped, "He is—alive!"

The wounded Chinaman had only strength to nod his head in the negative.

"Then there is time yet," ground out Wu furiously. "Follow me."

Craig was still bending over Long Sin making sure of his capture when he heard the scurry of footsteps outside. It was Wu and his servants. Craig rushed to the door, but not in time to close it.

Instantly his gun spat a fatal dab of smoke and fire at the foremost Chinaman, who dropped. Craig seized the next onrushing Oriental and flung him over his head, butting him like a human battering ram directly into Wu.

Craig's onslaught had been fiercer and more unexpected than the Chinamen had bargained for. They recoiled. Kennedy instantly slammed the door on Wu and the rest.

They recovered in a few seconds and returned to the attack, battering against the door. It swayed and creaked with the weight of the Chinamen pushing against it, while Kennedy plugged away blindly with his gun through the panels.

Down the street I wondered, as the minutes passed, what was happening behind the calm exterior of our apartment. Elaine was anxious; Chase was impatient. But I wished to be exact.

As the ten minutes ended I gave the signal to the driver. The police crowded in with us and we shot around the corner and up the street. In front of the apartment we could see and hear now that shots were being fired off. Were we in time?

We dashed upstairs. As we came down the hall we caught a glimpse of Wu Fang and his underlings at our door. They had almost broken through.

We were too late to get Kennedy. But we were too late to get them.

Wu knocked out the foremost policeman and dashed down the hallway with another after him. He managed to gain the roof and clamming the door up there braced it on the other side. Then, crossing the roofs, he succeeded in reaching another apartment and escaping.

"Craig," I shouted, pulling on the battered but still locked door. "This is Walter."

The door opened and we plied into Kennedy's room.

There sat Long Sin, at last manacled and bound, sullen, in a chair.

Prominent Figures in Foresters' Convention

On January 1 of This Year Membership Totalled 41,026 with Assets of $787,497.50.

By C. O'CONNELL GALVIN.

Eight hundred delegates of the Massachusetts Catholic Order of Foresters, representing all sections of Massachusetts, will gather in Convention Hall, St. Botolph street, on Wednesday, May 26, for the thirty-sixth annual convention of the order.

Under the direction of the Chief Rangers' Association, consisting of past and present rangers of subordinate courts within the district of Greater Boston, a reception will be tendered the delegates on Tuesday evening, May 25 (the night before the day of the convention), in Symphony Hall.

High Chief Ranger Joseph T. Brennan of Boston will call the delegates to order at 9:30 o'clock Wednesday morning. The opening prayer will be offered by the chaplain-general, Rev. James H. O'Neil, LL. D., pastor of the church of the Sacred Heart, East Boston.

After the opening address of the high chief ranger, Secretary-Treasurer Daniel H. Maguire of Haverhill will read his report showing the growth of the order and the state of its finances. This report will be heard with satisfaction by the delegates, for its facts will show a condition of prosperity and of financial soundness the greatest since the organization was founded in 1879.

With a constant growth, joined the most careful and conservative administration, the affairs of the vast society have reached a standard which brings it to the level of the front rank fraternal bodies of the United States.

MEMBERSHIP 41,026

On January 1, this year, the membership totalled 41,026, distributed into 240 Courts. The total assets on the same day amounted to $787,499.50. The total liabilities stood at $42,-.73.

The total insurance in force the day of the year was $39,856,000.

Since the birth of the order, in Boston, on Sept. 30, 1879, the death claims paid amount to $5,236,156.17. The convention will be a notable one, aside from the very large representation from the various courts, because of certain features of the several official reports. These will include the fact that the increase in membership during the past twelve months has been most gratifying, that more benefits have been paid than ever before within one year, and the additional fact that the reserve fund has grown to such proportions as to insure the fulfillment of the obligations for which it was established.

Besides these progressive facts the High Standing Committee's report will show that the number of applications received during the year was 3,423, and of this number 2,926 were approved, the average age of applicants admitted during the year 1914 was 36.5 years; the average age of applicants rejected during 1914 was 38 years; the number of women admitted during the year was 1,186; the number of men admitted during the year was 1,640; the number of women in the order on December 31, 1914, was 15,811; the number of men in the order on the same day was 24,045.

The number of deaths during the year was 447, as against 408 in 1913; 370 in 1912; 375 in 1911; 332 in 1910; 304 in 1909; 281 in 1908; 277 in 1907; 218 in 1906; and 226 in 1905.

MORTUARY STATISTICS.

The death rate per thousand on the average membership in 1914 was 11.3 as against 10.79 in 1913; 10.33 in 1912; 11.1 in 1911; 10.63 in 1910; 10.46 in 1909; 9.63 in 1908; 10.58 in 1907; 9.22 in 1906; 10.46 in 9105; 11.14 in 1904; 8.29 in 1903; 9.55 in 1902 and 11.54 in 1901.

Three hundred and twenty-seven men and one hundred and twenty women died during the year. The average time of payment of the Mortuary Benefits paid was 14 days.

The average length of membership of members who died in 1914 was fifteen years, nine months, and the average age at death was fifty-one years, five months and twenty-seven days.

During the past year two additional courts have been instituted, Our Lady of Grace Court, Roxbury, with a charter list of twenty-five, and Presentation Court of Oak Square, Brighton, with seventeen charter members.

The High Standing Committee has devoted much attention to the strengthening of the branches already in existence, rather than to the creation of new ones, with the result that the membership of the subordinate courts shows a marked increase in every section of the State.

The reports will show the past year to have been a strenuous one, independent of the statistics already given, the subordinate courts have paid out several thousands of dollars for the relief of sick and otherwise distressed members.

FOUNDS SCHOLARSHIP.

The order has established a scholarship at St. John's Theological Seminary at Brighton, the education of sons of its members for the priesthood; it has assisted very materially in the M. C. O. F. League for the protection of Delinquent Children, under the supervision of the directors of Catholic charities of the several dioceses of Massachusetts.

By voluntary subscription a sufficient fund was raised for the erection of a chapel under the direction of the Catholic Church Extension Society, at Puposky, Minn., which is dedicated to the memory of deceased members of the order.

At the time of Salem's affliction, a year ago, occasioned by the great conflagration which swept that historic city, many of the members of the Salem County were suffering. The order rallied to their aid and contributed promptly $4,146 for their stricken brothers and sisters.

High senior conductor, James H. Benson, Springfield.

High junior conductor, John W. Connelly, Dorchester.

High inside sentinel, William H. Thomas, Newton.

High chaplain, Rev. James H. O'Neil, LL. D., East Boston.

The names of those who have served as high chief ranger of the Massachusetts Catholic Order of Foresters since the date of its institution in 1879 are as follows:

FESTIVAL FOR ST. AUGUSTINE'S

What promises to be one of the biggest church entertainments given in the peninsular district will be centered tomorrow and Wednesday evenings in St. Augustine Hall, E street, South Boston, under direction of the parishioners of St. Augustine's Church.

Miss Helen Brick, musical director of the church, has arranged a splendid program of attractive music, with a large chorus of mixed voices, assisted by a specially picked orchestra. One of the features of the big festival will be the program of Big and red dances arranged for the old folks, with special music for them. The festival opened yesterday, which was observed as Children's day, for which a special program was given, consisting of Punch and Judy shows, folk dancing, vaudeville and other forms of amusement that appealed to the little ones.

Rev. M. C. Gilbride is the general director of the big carnival, and has had the active assistance of the pastor, Rev. Joseph F. Coppinger, and of the curates, Rev. Edward A. Costello and Rev. Henry Lyons, together with the parishioners, who have given their aid in an endeavor to make this year's affair eclipse all other entertainments of this kind in the history of the famous old church.

A number of prominent men have accepted invitations to be present and speak. Miss Kathleen V. O'Connor will play cornet solos and Gertrude A. Goodman will be seen in a series of fancy dances. The general committee comprises:

Rev. J. Kelly	Mrs. John F. Wallace
Rev. Thomas James A. Gaffney	Mrs. Mary Ryan
